face, who stands by the high little window and looks out upon the road. Perhaps she fancies there is a figure coming in the distance. Perhaps she fancies she hears a voice. It is only the humming of the mill, the clatter of the quavering voices as they stir: "Misericord Domini."

WEASLE KEEN ON THE TRAIL. Little Animal a Determined but Graceful Hunter. The little mouse weaslet may be observed wherever it is on the trail. At an open place, with nose to the ground, it will sniff about, sniffing literally to glide along through the rank herbage by the bank.

It may be the scent of a rat, and the trail to take it and that of the bank a good many times before it comes up with its victim. It may even have to swim a stream before its persistence is rewarded. It is wonderful how small a hole that long, aerated body can glide into and emerge from without the slightest disturbance.

When it has caught and killed its prey its movements are equally graceful if it carries the spoil home to its hole. Crossing a Kentish field this week I saw a weaslet coming along under the hedgerow root (toothed from the side) and it was disposed to do so at a fair price. We do not believe that it will be possible to secure well-cured cheese in this country.

STETSON SIGNED THE NOTICE. Comical Mistake of One of Boston's Famous Characters. John Stetson, the theatrical manager, was a stickler for detail. During the policy days of the old Globe Theatre club company, Mr. Stetson became irritated at his stage manager, Mr. Sharp, and found fault with him in many ways.

Impulse, a flash, and it was done. Both were in it. At the bridge she stopped. "Miss me now," she cried. He stooped and kissed her passionately. "I will return for you soon, Chiquita," he said, "No one will know, in the direction of the private soldier."

Lesson in Architecture. One of the young architects who delivers a lecture on modern architecture in the series of free public lectures in the city of Boston, addressed the ladies of the Colonne on the other night, when he thought of an experience he once had on a similar subject.

Two Kinds of Liquor Bills. Representative Nehemiah Day Sperry of Connecticut was leaning mournfully over the back rail in the House of Representatives the other day. Mr. Sperry was talking to the committee on alcoholic liquor trade.

Standard Milk. By standard milk and cream is meant that which has a definite composition, thus establishing a basis for valuation. Let it be clearly understood by producers and consumers alike that everybody, that in these days the dealer can furnish the customer with milk of any desired richness, without regard to the quality of the milk received, and all milk should be either so standardized or else bought and sold according to its natural composition.

Saving Manure. In the handling of barnyard manure it is not the stables and keep the measure in the yard well rotted. We recognize the value of liquid manure and use as much of it as possible. There is no special contrivance for this purpose. Bedding helps to do this, and it is a great deal of very little composting. We do not haul our manure in winter, spring or in summer, usually hauling out the following summer. In our experience the best method of handling and applying barnyard manure is to let it become well-rotted in the stable, and then apply it evenly. The time of application matters little if the manure is well rotted.

Spiritual Prompted Well Drilling. The deepest well drilled for many years in northern Pennsylvania, now under way in the Gaines field, was dug solely by a Spiritualist of Elmira, who claims to have seen a rich vein of the field at a depth of 4000 feet. He was induced to go on to get this result was induced to go on to get this result was induced to go on to get this result.
