

PERMANENTLY RICH.
It is quite unnecessary in this country, says Dr. Charles W. McMillan, to have a large inheritance, as the man who has made his money in the world of work, to feel a sense of the value of a permanent class of very rich people. To transmit great wealth to his children, they get divided or dispersed. The better and the best way to keep their inherited treasures, or if, by the help of lawyers and other hired agents, they manage to keep intact, they cease to accumulate, and only spend. This is one of the natural effects on the children of the very rich man's mode of life. With rarest exception the very rich men of to-day are not the sons of the very rich men of 20 years ago, but are the sons of men who were the same 30 years hence. The wise rich father will try to put his sons into those beneficial professions and occupations which have strong intellectual and moral content, and which peculiarly independence is a distinct advantage. Such are the public service in elective or appointive offices, the military, scientific research, and the management of charities and of serviceable endowments. Inherited wealth enables young men to devote themselves early to these fields, which are less peculiarly remunerative, but yet possess the highest sort of interest and offer all the rewards of beneficent influence among men.

Health of School Children.
Proper attention to the health of children is an excellent eye investment. A great part of the diseases which develop in chronic form could be obviated by closer medical supervision of children's health. Especially defects in hearing, eyesight or teeth can be checked in early life, while in later years they are confirmed to yield to treatment. The investigation of the board of education have shown that a majority of the school children have either defective eyesight or defective hearing. It is now proposed to examine the school children's teeth also. This experiment has been tried in Germany, where attention to the teeth has improved the hearing of the hearing by improving the digestion of the children treated. It is as necessary for a child to have sound eyes and good teeth as it is to have sound hearing.
