

The Good Old Way. Like the shadow of a great rock in a weary land come the news of an old-fashioned eloquent from Richmond, Ind.

The common or garden eloquent is ordinary and unromantic at every point as to be wholly uninteresting, if not absolutely tiresome, in the recital.

With a young couple "make a date with each other, board a street car, ride to the theatre, dine at a restaurant, be married by a parson or a justice of the peace. Usually it is "all for a joke" or "to surprise their friends."

Not so with this Indiana couple. Who knows asks the St. Louis Republic, and then suggests by way of an excuse, that it may be that the influence of Charles Major or Booth (Karl) or James Whitcomb Riley so permeates the atmosphere of Hoosierdom that even the most unromantic of us are unconsciously influenced by the spirit of romance.

It must have been a case of impulse as this that moved the young Richmond couple to resort to the old-fashioned, romantic, and, alas, ill-advised means of a ladder placed at the foot of a bedroom window. Not in daylight, mind you, no, not when all the curious world might see, but in the silent watches of the night, and in the dark of the moon, at the last degree.

Such an example of this to guide to future generations, was convinced that the spirit of romance shall not perish from the face of Indiana or the earth.

In commenting on nature's kinship, as suggested by conditions in desolated San Francisco, a writer in the Woodstock says: "The human intellect, already busy about its broken home," and adds:

"The whole song of Nature is, 'Let the dead bury their dead.' The dead are only worms waiting to be transformed and used again as quickly as possible. It is right that they should be neglected and forgotten. It is the great law of Nature concerning herself only with life and with the future of the race, and not with the dead."
