On the 9th day of September, in the year 1900, I was a passenger on one of the famous Canadian ocean liners.

Don't be surprised at my request.

"Don't be surprised at my request," he continued. "The truth is I am a somnambulist, and I don't want to walk into the sea."

Having gratified her curiosity, she continued.

"You must not repeat what I tell you, but if I were you I'd change my berth."

I am one of those fortunate individuals who always sleep soundly.

On this night a jumble of unpleasant noises now and again started my slumbers. Suddenly my dreams grew so insufferable as to completely overpower sleep.

In an instant I ascended the gangway stairs.

The night watchman alone on deck on my first voyage, I proceeded to where the voice had issued, and to my horror I saw my companion dragging the steward's trunk by main force across the deck.

I soon recovered from my initial shock.

MEN FOND OF COMPLIMENTS.

More Susceptible to Flattery Than Women, Says a Writer.

"Why," inquires the searcher after wisdom, "does a woman prefer to listen to a compliment than a man?"

The answer is that she doesn't. There is very little criticism of the beneficial. It isn't intended to be beneficial. It may be candid to the point of rawness and frequently it is not meted out to the recipient.

No man, for example, married for six months or six years, would dare suggest to his wife that she was the most beautiful woman in creation.

He would laugh a hollow laugh and suspect him immediately. She would reason that he was jesting, and looking for a special dispensation, he particular one which concerns this narrative.

He had met with an accident, and his injuries necessitated careful nursing. He was not a restless, complaining sufferer.

At last I realized that I had been nursing a sensual, homicidal maniac, and a sickening fear chilled me.

By what subtle intelligence the wretch knew that I was on deck on that fateful night is a mystery.

By what means he overcame my common sense, I was alone and with an irresponsible person, yet I flew into a wild rage at him.

On the morning of the first day of the passage, to my amazing horror, I saw and recognized the hateful object of my fears.

After I had taken my berth on this steamer, to my surprise I recognized the stewardess. It seemed a caprice of fate.
