

WHAT BECAME OF OLD GLASSES

Mother's Effort to Check Child's Curiosity Proves Futile

A Boston three-year-old, like Mr. Kipling's elephant's child is distinguished by her "insatiable curiosity."

Accidentally, when accidents in the kitchen and the expectation of guests to dine, rendered the purchase of new water glasses necessary.

"Sarah," she said, "these are new glasses. I bought them at Sears' yesterday afternoon at 420 1/2 Chick."

H. G. Wilks of England, the foremost man in the world of the day, in an interesting article in Chicago and in a magazine article tells all about the experience.

How Rhodes and Bett Met

Mr. Rhodes once told a circle of friends after dinner the story of his first meeting with Bett.

WOMEN'S NEGLECT

SUFFERING THE SURE PENALTY

Health Lost! Lost! Is Restored by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

How many women do you know who are perfectly well and strong? We see every day the sad story of women who are not.

Miss Kate McDonald

More than likely you speak the same words yourself, and no doubt you feel far from well.

These symptoms are but warnings that there is danger ahead, and unless heeded a life of suffering or a serious operation is the inevitable result.

For twenty-five years Mrs. E. Pinkham, daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham, has under her direction, and since her decease, been advising women near and far of charge.

THE LADY AND THE GOBLIN

By HENRY A. HERING

"Mr. Septimus Toft, sir," the letter which lies on the stool.

"J. Driver" was a dark-haired man, with a bold, clean-shaven chin.

"Now to business," said Mr. Driver. "You know my name and I know yours."

"I don't understand," said Mr. Toft. "In fact I haven't the faintest idea who you are alluding to."

"Well," said J. Driver, with a dig in the ribs that made Mr. Toft jump.

"What about them?" asked Mr. Toft, shrinking from his familiarity.

"What about work you never did, for which you've not false receipts?"

"You can't!" said Mr. Driver, rising. "At present the admiralty only suspects."

Mr. Toft scarcely heard him. He was thinking over the pros and cons of the situation as rapidly as his nervous system would allow.

Mr. Toft hesitated no longer. From one side of the chain he detached a gold key, which he handed covertly to Driver.

"Now your visitin' card," said Mr. Toft, producing one, and handed it over.

"Now, Toft, my boy, don't worry. You'll have that key back by Friday."

"Then it's a good-bye all away from me. With this Mr. Driver rose and stalked out of the room."

At nine a. m. on the following morning the bell of the Fellmongers' company pealed vigorously.

"This is the gentleman who has been invited to dinner at my house."

"Dear me," said the lady. "How stupidly I have been informed. Please show me the room."

"I'll tell you what, Maria," said Mr. Toft. "If she's a hartist I ought to be president of the Royal Academy."

Wally Mr. Jeckell was on his way to his chair there came another peal from the front entrance bell.

"Mr. Toft has sent me for the Nelson goblin," he said.

Mr. Remetteh Fryer, of 180 South Tenth St., Montreal, P. Q., Canada.

The porter's wife appeared. She had just gone into the plate room with her basket.

The wife rushed across to the plate room and in a minute a storm of voices proceeded thence.

"You're in danger," said the artist rapidly in French.

"You go down there," said the artist. "Good-by! She ran off in the opposite direction, still holding the bag."

The next day the members of the Burglar's club proved the most important in his history.

The secretary read the minutes, and concluded: "The business of the evening is the payment of an entrance fee."

"My lords and gentlemen," he said. "I thank you. In accordance with the usual custom of your club I will explain how I have been able to fulfill my appointment."

"My next step was to trace the lady. I did not know her name in English, but being here I concluded that the foreign office would have her address."
