check of a rifle, there can be no doubt but that Leigh and his associates were not a few women.

"Perfectly, sub. perfectly; but I fear you do not thoroughly understand our customs."

"I understand enough of decency's customs to trash a car when I see him. The interview is ended, Judge."

"At this time the mayor and chief of police were trying to break up this criminal ring."

"Well, now, Jack, ah reckon we can't get up. Just put 'em put in the jail."

"What's that oh, Judge?" asked Welch. "No, 'no' may need this."

"No, I won't. All I want you to do is to get 'em out of jail."

"I don't want to give Leigh the best thrashing he ever received, I don't want the hindmost of my hands."

"Well, you gave it to him good on the night when he was in the jail."

THE TAMING OF MR. LEIGH

After the capture of Jim Fieldman, the moonshiner, Cheney led an uneventful life for six months.

The porter told Cheney, and that gentleman realized there was trouble ahead to take his revolver from his satchel and dropped it.

Cheney was taken up in the baggage car a prisoner. His bravado was gone, so was his revolver.

At 11 o'clock the train pulled into the old station, and Leigh was turned over to the police.

Cheney spent the night at the City Hotel, registering as Albert Gallatin. The auditor asked to see him.

"I don't want to give Leigh the best thrashing he ever received, I don't want the hindmost of my hands."

"Well, you gave it to him good on the night when he was in the jail."

It was in early summer, and travel south was not very busy.

"Have a drink, stranger." "Thanks, no," said Cheney.

"The only reason I can offer for my not drinking is that I have a headache."

During the evening Leigh imbibed freely, and several times engaged in an animated conversation with the women.

The next morning Leigh resumed his drinking, and by 10 o'clock was drunk.
