He looks a very prince of men. Fair form and feature, noble mien; But something wanting, weigh it then, What is that something which is unseen, That this fair sample of the race,

With voice of thunder, frame of power, Is lacking all his worth to grace, His complement and being's flower?

Who sits enthroned at his right hand, The man ascended in the scale, Who set his foot on earthy things, To wear a crown that never fails.

Who dared a cross, more sons to bring, To save a crown that never fails.
