There used to be told a comical story about a judge who occasionally, when off the bench, yielded to temptation and imbibed too freely for his own good. The tale went on to tell'hat on one occasion the worthy man having diasipated to an extent regarded by the judge as scandalous, the offender arraigned himself, at the bar, where a plea of guilty was entered and the jurist imposed an exemplary fine upon himself. There seems to have been a similar working of conscience down in Missiassippl, where a grand jury in dicted every one of its own members for violating the Sunday law, with the result that the culprits were darraigned in court and were fined 110 apiece. That grand jury certainly furnished proof of stacerity when it "gave up" readily.

In England interes: has been shown of late by the armly and nays authorities in a new method of preserving flour by means of compression. With hydraulic pressure apparatus the flour is squeezed into the form of bricks, and experiments are reported to have shown that the presame destroys all forms of larval life, thus preserving the flour from the ravages of inacets, while it is equally separe from mold. Three hundred populad of compressed flour occupy the same space as 109 pounds of four in the ordbury, state.
