Real Estate Exchange

By Mrs. Edward Dunroy-Reed

The following is a partial list of Farms, City and Village Lots, and Real Estate generally which we have for sale. As our list is constantly changing, we request that parties will write us if they do not see what they want in this list.

using a proclamation of a public Thanksgiving Day. The invitation This accepted, and in November, 1823, Plymouth colony and Massachusetts Bay colony celebrated Thanksgiving day together in a manner pretty much the same as their descendants do today. In religious service and feasting and funmaking. The one noticeable omission was the great football game which marks the day in our country.

It was not until 1877 the New England records show that 22 different governors were set apart by the various governors as days for public Thanksgiving, and that with the exception of the two colonies mentioned no two held the day on the same date. In 1863, however, were held in October or November.

In 1877, as other denominations had crept into Plymouth colony over which the Puritan church had no ruling, the governor decided that it would be well to have the power of fixing public holidays whether for feasting, praying, or funmaking, vested in civil authority. Accordingly in that year the first printed Thanksgiving day proclamation was printed. Thanksgiving day proclamation was printed, setting November 25 as the festival.

The law reads: "That it be in the power of the governor and assistants to command, according to the pleasure of the rulers of the colonies, and there never was any feeling of certainty as to the holiday.

That it was held annually with out break in Plymouth and Massachusetts Bay colony from its inception until 1863, with the exception of the year when King Philip's war interrupted, there are records to show the church and government alternated in arranging the date of celebration.

GEORGE ON THANKSGIVING

Thanksgiving day comes one year because the Pilgrim band was thankful that they had the sense to leave their native land. And come across the sea to find a stern and cold shore. Where they would never halt to bossa any more, Where they would not break in and steal and murder, and during which time they called Spanish hedge-podge. For once in their practical lives the Hollanders became facetious, and over this hedge-podge they made merry and cracked jokes at their old-time enemy—Spain. The general "shaklike" appearance of the hedge-podge was supposed to represent the condition of the Spanish army when the Dutch had vanquished it. Even the children entered into the fun and kept the history fresh by gleefully slashing into a potato or a turnip and chucking as they swallowed the morsel. This is General So-and-So—Ah! Me eat him—so!"

Well, the Puritans heard and approved of the early religious services of the morning and their healthy appetites could not wait to appreciate the Spanish hedge-podge, however much they may have disapproved of the sentiment which favored it, so they entered most heartily into the Dutch Thanksgiving. In the evening harvest songs were sung by the light of the moon, over the beer and ale, which flowed freely. A dinner, such as only the early English could prepare, was served to these great crowds of Thanksgiving, and the harvest Home day ended in repetition both of appetite and merrymaking.

Before the formation a special day was set apart in England for giving thanks, and after the reformation the custom was continued with added fervor, but after all, it is not from our English ancestors that we might suppose we received the inspiration for our first Thanksgiving day.

Neither did the idea originate with the Pilgrims themselves. They merely continued a custom which they had become familiar and of which their natures approved, when they were living with their Dutch cousins.

To digress just a little: It had been claimed by some investigators who stopped just a little short of the beginning in tracing backward to the first real Thanksgiving day of true American meaning was held by the Popahans colonies of Monhegan, and that very day when she told it and no one laughed. It was the ancient tale about the man who swallowed the whiskey and said "Charge it." This conversation ensued between the barkeeper and his boss, who happened to be in the cellar: "Is that good for a drink?" "Has he it?" "He has." "He has." As Miriam told it: "A wicked, longshoreman, finding a new barkeeper in charge at his favorite saloon, ordered a glass of whisky, drank it, and said 'Charge it.' This conversation ensued between the barkeeper to Tim Casey. So the barkeeper shouted down to the proprietor, who happened to be busy in the cellar: "Mister Callaghan, has Timothy Casey sufficient credit in his establishment to warrant me in charging some liquor to his account?" And the proprietor called back: "Has Mister Casey consumed the liquor in question?" And the barkeeper shouted down in reply: "Oh, yes, he has consumed it. Very well, then," said the proprietor of the saloon, who was something of a philosopher in his way-very well, then, you may just as well charge it to his account."—Harpers Weekly.

Thoreau's Philosophy.

A gentle rain makes the grass many shades greener; so our prospects brighten. We should be blessed if we lived in the present always and took advantage of every accident that befell us, and did not spend time in atoning for past neglect, which we could only do by—Thoreau.

Best to Conquer Sorrow. The best way to conquer sorrow is to open the heart to the sunshine of life.

Limit of Time Without Food. When the body of a starving animal is starving, it loses two-fifths of its substance, the inevitable result is death.
