

MISS LETITIA'S WAY

By OLIVE WINSTON-GAGE

"I would like to know to whom Miss Letitia will give that beautiful pinkish mauve crope de chine," mused Betty Cleveland; she was still called Betty by every one, though she had long and secretly she liked the abbreviation better than the real name Elizabeth. "Last year she gave me a beautiful church, and street tailored dress, and this year she has ordered from a perfectly exquisite visiting and reception dress, and one of us will get it, but which one? Miss Letitia's an old dear, and she says it is her wish of indulging her love for pretty things her taste tells her is too juvenile for her, though she's handsomely enough to wear anything, I hope she will be the fortunate one this year," Betty dimpled and blushed; "I do hope so," naively. "I had as well ask daddy for the moon as for a handsome crope, trimmed with fountains of the finest point lace, and hat, gloves, stockings, and slippers to match, and lingerie, hand made, a princess might be proud to wear. I do want that dress, dreadfully, but I'll try—more slowly—I do hope to get the one that gets it. Tracy loves that color—never does know what—Miss Letitia in favor of the red she is playing fairer godmother—I do hope it will be me."

Betty is a dainty southern maiden of the thoroughbred type, colored like rose, and distracting enough to reduce a dozen swains to despair. She, with half a dozen other girls, met at Miss Letitia's once a week, to take lessons in dress sewing from that handsome spinster.

In her trim walking skirt and pink shirtwaist of soft tucked china silk, Betty looked most captivating, and so Tracy Dunlop told her as they walked toward Miss Letitia's handsome home.

"We will never have another misunderstanding, Tracy," Betty assured him for the hundredth time, and while Tracy might be skeptical, he knew his lady too well to express doubt so soon after being returned to favor. "I hope not, Betty, think Miss Letitia might let a fellow come and see your charmed circles. I say, isn't she handsome for an old girl?"

"You mustn't speak so of her, Tracy; she is our godmother, you know. Did you know I am making Letitia buy her first short clothes? You should see him, he's such a fine fellow." "Think Miss Letitia's a brick, must you? I can't go to the door with you," he entreated, as they paused at the gate.

"No," said Betty, obediently. "Then, wait a moment—why do care for me a little, don't you, sweetheart?" "Yes, when you are a good boy," and with that shaft, she sprang up the walk to join Miss Letitia and her attendant assembled in the spacious airy sitting room.

Miss Letitia Houghton was a handsome, well-preserved woman of fifty-five or six, with a fine figure, and a splendid head of silvery hair, very becoming to her rosy cheeks and bright eyes. Everything about her was sunshiny; her dress of violet velvet and never knew. She did not decide by prompt attendance, so they were totally in the dark.

"Lagged Betty," exclaimed Miss Letitia, playfully, enjoying, as she always did, the girl's fresh bloom. "Luncheon will be ready in half an hour or so; make up for lost time; Betty, those hand-run tacks, leather settees, are beautifully done."

"You see, Tracy tagged along, and when he's with you the distance is much farther; you got to chatting, you know."

"Yes, my dear; I know; I have been young."

"When I am coming to those highly prized lessons, my feet are winged," murmured the correct Myra. "Yes," observed Miss Letitia, with a quick glance from her gold-rimmed glasses at the quiet figure, "you were never five minutes late at an appointment in your life, Myra."

"Her white jeweled hand rested on Betty's curly dark brown head. Encouraged by that she thought was high praise, the conversation, Myra proceeded to give her friends a highly moral lesson.

"Jane, I was so sorry to hear what a princess might be proud to wear. I do want that dress, dreadfully, but I'll try—more slowly—I do hope to get the one that gets it. Tracy loves that color—never does know what—Miss Letitia in favor of the red she is playing fairer godmother—I do hope it will be me."

"I do not know what you mean," replied Jane. "Why, that your brother—you know people talk so much—I had to be here wild at college and your father had to send for him to come home."

"My brother has been studying too hard, and papa took him from college," said Jane Pagan.

"Really?" incredulously, "then the story of high school wasn't true? I like, I hope your father wasn't very angry at your being out doing so late last night."

"A faint blush colored her cheeks, and she detained us, but I had been home an hour when you drove by with Luther Awkright."

"There was general laughter at this time, and Tracy, who had been discovered with confusion a moment, then she said:

"Mr. Awkright took me to see one of my poor girls who was well behaved. 'Luther Awkright paying visits to that kind!' ejaculated Deborah; none but kind."

"Judge now! We know the rest, Betty, why did Tracy leave his place so suddenly? It is true he was dismissed from school for some reason."

"The face of every girl was flaming, and Miss Letitia spoke with authority. 'Children, do not reprimand; let your needles fly, but don't handle any other sharp things. Myra, learn charity before you preach it. Betty, trust that Tracy has a good reason for giving up his place.'

"We will go to luncheon! Put up your seats!"

A week later, a vision in pinkish mauve and lace danced into the 'Clavand drawing room, and as Tracy caught her, he was so much alarmed, Betty exclaimed breathlessly: 'I got it, you see, the dress I told you about, Tracy,' earnestly, 'it's not that, but it's a pink one, Mr. Brown's, eh?'

"Yes, dearest, that is vindication enough from my late employer. I have written a report that my discharge was for nothing derogatory."

"I was sure of that. Isn't my dress lovely? Look at it, sir, and not at me!" "It's beautiful, but not half so beautiful as you."

GOOD PEN IN WHICH TO KEEP THE BULL

Arrangement Which Obviates Necessity of Going Into the Stall of the Animal.

The Bull Pen.

In the illustrations accompanying this article we show the elevation and ground plan of the building and yard in which the herd bull on the Hoard's Dairyman farm is kept.

It does not take much explaining to indicate how the animal is handled and fed in such a place. Everything is so arranged that it is not necessary for a man to go into the pen from his pen to the runway raising up the stall with the bull. From the feed room the feed is put into the feeding trough and slid through the partition into his stall. He is watered in the same manner. The door which leads when opened and this is done by a pulley and a rope. The pulley is attached to the peak of the barn above the doorway and the rope attached to the door extends to it and to the feed room where the door may be opened or closed.

The door between the breeding pen and runway is always kept closed, except when it is opened to let the bull into the stall. The cow is led in before this door and the man steps out before letting the bull enter. The hay is stored above the feed room and bull stall.
