TO MYRTLE LAUGHING.

When Myrtle laughs I sometimes think that a human ear could never drink a laugh so dainty as one given by her. (When she is laughing just as mine.)

And yet, remarkable to say, at times it is just the other way. (A beautiful, but not a happy, laugh.) (Especially when compared with yours.) (When she is laughing just as mine.)

Oh, for a pair of wings to soar to see remote and Southwestern shores. (When Myrtle's laughing laugh, would I at every pore I were to spring.)

At every pore I were to spring. (A beautiful, but not a happy, laugh.) (Especially when compared with yours.) (When she is laughing just as mine.)

Back-Handed Compliment. (Who who has just returned from the dentist—I shall be awfully stupid now.)

Husband—Why so, my dear? (Wife—I have had all my wisdom teeth pulled out.)

Husband with the best intention in the world—Of course, my love, you'll have to do with wisdom. (If you were to have any in your head, it couldn't make you any stupider, you know.)

Modern Education. (I go to French classes—I am shocked to find that my daughter has been reading French in French from a young man.)

Governess—Pardon, madam! It is only my little ones that read manly books. (The lady who she would reply to an unknown lover—a Frenchman—how quickly she will learn my language.)

THEIR TEARS. (What man has the heart to shed his tears? (When a pretty woman weeps.) (When a pretty woman weeps.) (When a pretty woman weeps.)

SPOILED HER STORY

SHORT-TEMPERED MAN MADE WIFE LOOK FOOLISH.

Determined Attempts to Spoil Social Evening Finally Crowned with Success—To Be Hoped She Got Even with Him.

Hiving got out his evening clothes, including the one remaining shirt with broad gauge bosom, and "that 4-2 hat," as Hiving always referred to his opera cravat. Yet Mr. Hiving didn't care much for society himself. He trailed along just to keep peace.

When they were all ready for the start that night, and Mrs. Hiving kept remarking peevishly that they were going to be late, as usual, she supposed, Hiving happened to notice that his patent leathers looked sort of dinky. Even Mrs. Hiving admitted that he'd better take time to dab a little liquid polish on the footgear. Just as he was finishing the other shoe he straightened up for a minute and dropped a wee drop of the polish on his shirt bosom. It was an infinitesimal particle, much smaller than the ordinary dribble of commerce, and wouldn't have mattered at all. But finding it there just when he was hustling to get to that society affair infuriated Hiving some.

"Look at me, will you?" he shouted to his wife. "I don't see anything but a little speck on your shirt," responded the wife, mildly. "That's all you see, her? Well, you'll see more, Mrs. Hiving, and pretty quick, too. I'm here to stay. I'll just make the infernal shirt front look real good and rotten while we're at it."

Whereupon Hiving proceeded, as his ruffled temper dictated. He took the dabber and drew two broad bands down over the bosom and two more across, forming a double cross effect.

"Now, then!" roared Hiving, in a tone of triumph, not even noticing his wife's glances, "now, then!"

"Now we won't get to the party at all," wailed Mrs. Hiving, "and after getting a new gown for the affair! All on account of that abominable, tasteless temper of yours. O-oh-o-oh!"

"It's just disgusting, the silly folk things you do when some little thing goes wrong. You shd. wait into the other room and then brush on the lounce."

Hiving, of course, had cooled down some by this time. His wife was right. They would have to stay at home. And Hiving well knew that it would be many a week before he would be able to square himself for that night's work.

But Hiving got out of it. He called a cab and sent Mrs. Hiving alone, saying that he had some things to do as soon as he could dig up a shirt some place.

A half hour later, Mrs. Hiving, smiling, was telling how she snatched up one of these shirts. "An important business matter," she was saying, "and the dear he just made me some things. I thought it was such a good when he was obliged to go down town, but he insisted that I save it."

Then when Hiving finally arrived, looking to be plain, his first words to the group of women his wife had been talking to was: "Well, I suppose my wife's a little bit more along with my shirt front and like to never get here at all, eh?"

Furs Outshone Those of Royalty. Mrs. Wainwright Reed, the wife of the American ambassador, never is guilty of that fault to which, according to French notions, her countrywomen are so much addicted—the wearing of the costumes made by the "dubious" seamstress in London or New York. She is occasionally seen at a dinner party with a display of wealth far beyond anything allowed open to the fashion of "tentative vulgarity." Such an opportunity was afforded her the following evening. The furs she wore were beyond magnificent. They were of the finest Russian sable, and neither of the two guests present had any of the lesser varieties had furs that would stand comparison with them. When it came to diamonds, the contrast was all the other way. In the matter of displaying jewelry Mrs. Reed exercised becoming moderation. But those who took note of her furs knew that it was not a question of economy.

Alexander's Escape. As a young man Alexander the Great escaped death in a curious manner. A great banquet was being held at Pella, the capital of Macedonia, at which were present the future conqueror of the world and his father, Philip.

During the feast one of the guests proposed a toast and prayer offensive to Alexander, who humbled a noble at him. King Philip, angry at this outrage, started to draw his sword, and was about to plunge upon his son, but he had drunk so deeply that before he reached him he fell prostrate among the terrified merry-makers.

As a result of this at the extraordinary escape from death, Alexander retorted: "Here is a man preparing to cross from Europe into Asia, who can't get any farther from one coach to another."

An Apprehension. "So you don't want government ownership of railroads?" "No," answered Mr. Sibus Baker. "If the government should own the railroads, we'd have the men who know all about the business to manage them."

"Very likely." "Very likely," we don't need 'em in official life. Politics is tricky enough so."

—Exchange.

Highly Practical. "Your business college for young ladies seems to be all right." "It is all right." "Do you give the girls a good, practical business training?" "In reply to that question I can only say that 60 per cent. of our graduates marry their employers the first year."
