SWISS RIFLE CLUBS.

Method in Vogue in Little Republic Which Makes Every One a Soldier.

At a time when the question of military training for civilians is being discussed, it is almost necessary to mention the Swiss system, from the Manchester Guardian, may be of interest.

The 4th-60th of Swiss enters the army at 20 years of age, and serves 63 days in his first year.

While the Swiss militiaman lacks in military ordnance, he far more than makes up by skill with the rifle.

Every man between the ages of 20 and 42 must do 22 days of military exercises every year, and the societies receive a grant of two francs for every soldier shooting this course.

Rules as to spectators, methods of loading and conduct on the ranges are strict. Loss of grant is incurred by any breach or neglect of regulations.

In addition to these exercises, many competitions are held between different villages, and in the winter the trains and streams are crowded with jovial bands of marksmen going and from their shooting parties.

The history which you are so ably writing of the dear old Army of the Republic, writes a correspondent to the editor of the Nation, and which calls up most vividly many of the hard fighting and earnest men who were at fighting under the auspices of its different commanders.
