rod and punch two holes two inches apart, the size of copper rivets. The box is then riveted to the rod and when it is placed in the ground both hands are free for picking.

Use of the device shown in the accompanying illustration above described, says the Prairie Farmer, will be found to add a good many quarts of berries in the course of a day's picking.

FOOD VALUE OF MILK.

Prof. J. B. Lindsey Makes Strong Argument for It.

The food value of milk is brought out forcibly in a recent pamphlet written by Prof. J. B. Lindsey of the Massachusetts College of Agriculture and published by the state board of agriculture.

Milk of average quality at market prices furnishes more food for the money than do more expensive kinds of meat, such as beef, mutton and pork, and is much cheaper than such special foods as eggs or oysters, or most vegetables and fruits. Only breakfast foods, etc., are cheaper sources of energy than milk. A glance at Prof. Lindsey's table shows that milk at six cents a quart furnishes the same amount of protein as round beef at 16 cents or roast pork at 12 cents. That is to say, a dollar's worth of either of these foods contains an equal amount of protein. Even where milk is sold as high as ten cents per quart, a dollar will buy as much protein when spent for milk as if spent for lamb chops at 25 cents per pound, sirloin beef at 30 cents or eggs at 36 cents per dozen.

Prof. Lindsey thinks milk should occupy a larger place in the daily diet than is ordinarily given. In experiments at the Maine State College it was found that when the students were allowed free use of milk the extra milk consumed replaced the other animal food to a nearly corresponding extent, and the milk diet was not only less costly than the meat, but was fully as satisfactory. When skim-milk is used the food value is obtained at even less cost since the value as a food does not depend very much on the cream, and at the price at which it is valued in most country districts, about one-half a cent a quart, it is one of the very cheapest foods, and can be used to advantage in place of water in cooking, adding greatly to the value of the foods with which it is mixed. Hardly any food returns so much of its food value because there is no loss in cooking and no waste. It is palatable, easily digested, and according to Profs Lindsey is entitled to be classed among the most economical human foods.

FERTILIZING THE ORCHARD.

What Prof. Voorhees Thinks is the Best Treatment.

Prof. Voorhees spoke on fertilizers for fruit growers at the late meeting of the New Jersey Horticultural society. He called minerals and water the two elements of most importance to the fruit grower. Greater care should be taken in the use of stable manure in orchards than with any other kind of fertilizer. The original soil is a very important factor, and the fruit that grows well on one will not grow to a good maturity on another.

A mixture of one-third ground bone, acid phosphate and nitrate of potash is good for most kinds of fruit; the quantity to be applied may be regulated by the needs of the soil and crop. An annual application of 1,000 pounds per acre in the early life of an orchard would not be too much; also a light application each year. The amount to be used must be determined by the grower.

Cover crops should be used, he says, but not allowed to mature, as they take too much moisture from the trees; they should be plowed down while in a green state to supply humus, from which to secure nitrogen for future use.

ABOUT THE FARM.

A farmer is known by the tools he uses.

Sweet potatoes raised from cuttings of the vines from the early planted ones make potatoes that keep better than those grown from the early spring plants.

Thistles spread only from the seed. If the plant is not allowed to go to seed it will not spread over the pasture. The best time to cut the weed is just before it comes into bloom and before there is any possibility of the seed maturing.
