The homeward rush of sightseers has set in from Europe. We wonder how many of them have ever gone to Yellowstone park, have gazed upon the wonders of the grand canyon of the Colorado, or camped in the woods of California?

Even the accused mosquito has its uses. In New Jersey they got rid of it by hand cutting and exposing them to the mosquitoes. In a few minutes the traps are ready and eager to leave town. This is almost as barbarous as capital punishment.

Another prince is reported to be paying attention to his duties. Now that even royalty is anxious for the pretty American girl, it is not surprising that the chances of the young American man ought to be considered in the tariff at high protective rates on prices.

Aviation is the craze of the hour. Luckily, it is not a craze which has been generally adopted. There have been, and will some foolish ones will pay the usual price for reaching temerity, the experiments in the main will be confined to the look upon the question of air travel as something more than a passing fad.

Lieut. Shackleton of the British forces, who claims within an ace of discovering the south pole, will lecture in this country to the effect that the expenses in this important expedition. Of course, England will take the story of his adventures. On the date, he is left to pay the cost. It shows how much superior present gratitude is to posthumous glory and immortality monuments.

It is somewhat surprising that in a country of such thrifty persons as the French lottery should flourish to the extent they do. The man who saves money on small earnings seldom takes money on the chance on which lotteries depend, but it is a fact that France abounds in these institutions. The government has taken to the lotteries having just submitted to the Chamber of Deputies a proposition looking to the abolishment of lotteries.

The large plant to be erected at Wells, Mich., for the extraction of tannic acid from hemlock bark, represents an improvement in the process of tanning which has established economies in the manufacture of leather and enabled tanners to sell their product at lower figures. Formerly the tan bark was shipped in bulk and steam vessels to the various tanneries. It was ground up and subjected to treatment by the extraction of the tannic acid while the residue of the tanning was at the same time in process.

Statistics compiled by a technical committee show that in Europe one physician can care for 1,000 of a general population. If such a proportion holds good for Europe, it is reasonable to suppose that a similar proportion would be sufficient for the United States. As yet, according to the census of 1906, we had one doctor to every 1,000 of our population. It is estimated that the 1910 census will show at least 15,000 doctors in the United States. It is stated on authority that we are 35 years in advance of the natural requirement.
