Veteran Charity Worker Retires as Secretary of Associated Charities of Detroit

Dr. James A. Post recently retired from the secretaryship of the Detroit Association of Charities after 24 years of painstaking charity work.

"I feel that I have a right to be proud of my record as secretary of the Detroit Association of Charities," said Dr. Post.

"In all the years I have been with the association we have worked unflinchingly without friction. I believe our association has done much toward saving Detroit from the soup kitchen so common in other cities in time of panic conditions here always have been better than in other cities of the same size."

"I may retain active interest in the association by accepting a place on the board of directors which has been offered me. Otherwise I am going to rest and Mrs. Post and I are considering a trip to California."

When Dr. Post went to his office for his last day of active work, he found that his desk had been beautifully decorated with flowers by his associates.
