Many a man who can write books couldn't write a life insurance.

"A noble life before a long," said Shakespeare. But can't a long life be a noble one?

Fondness for the balloon often leads the child to a sad end. It is quite carried away with it.

Island in eye of the clouds which think they have risen up and, no longer need guardians.

"What is the difference between a woman and her photograph," asks a Kansas paper. Answer: The woman is a Kansas paper.

The Arkansas preacher has been a conundrizer. He is on the tax to consider the contribution plate failed to go for him.

The government in Germany in 1918 had the military balloons with light guns. They will naturally prefer air.

Pennsylvania man cuts off his finger with an ax to prove to his wife that he is a brave. The wife would have been glad to have it cut off by her finger.

Uncle Sam has stopped the full force for the army, as the ranks will be increased pay, and better condition of service make army life much more attractive than formerly.

Pennsylvania girl goes to a doctor to be treated for a sore throat and removes her appendix. Which is something like cutting off a leg or earache.

Detroit divorced couple had to ask the courts for permission to marry. The law says a divorced couple are not to be allowed to make fools of themselves twice.

The use of drums in the Russian army in times of war had been abolished. Thus has the war against civilization gained another point.

All the waters in one New York hotel have to have their main current every day by a professional. Any impairment of the skill to pair a tip.

More than 100 college graduates are to be held for a while those who carp at the benefits of higher education.

A Milwaukee court has decided that a lady must not raise her skirt more than 12 inches. No one talking, or getting harder every day to a perfect lady.

It's a pity that some of the knowledge that the men on the floor acquired on their trip around the world may be so hard to come by that it can't be imparted to our servant girls.

Dr. Long, the naturalist, says that men are more savage than beasts—that if animals have a corner in food, they will kill it loyally. Beasts have fortune corners and, unlike men, take no more than they need for themselves. But Dr. Long has been stamped by an eminent authority as a nature faker.

At a Chinese banquet in San Francisco 100 years old were the greatest delicacy offered. We like to see the Chinese eat anything, regardless of expense, but we cannot help thinking that for practical purposes the ordinary man would find ten years old quite enough of a delicacy.

The management of a London manager, having advertised for "a lady to dance in the lions den," received 447 applications for that perilous post, but chose a lady who died the Highland fling and escaped in safety. The lions took no notice of her. If human nature would follow their example, fewer persons would seek notoriety by foolhardy feats.

Coincidentally with the rise of Germany's sea power there is going on a remarkable development of the nation's waterways. Berlin is now anxious to be a seaport, and is making for a maritime canal from the Baltic sea in under way.

Orders have been issued by the navy department for the installation of the new skeleton fire-control towers on six battleships. This is equivalent to an amputating purpose, and it is a matter of halfheartedness in the service with towers of the new pattern. The skeleton tower is neither pretty nor "ship-shape," remarks the Milwaukee Evening News. It consists, but it is a practical contrivance that will withstand a great deal of pounding by an enemy's guns.
