cach sentence ends in a sort of crooning diminu-endo.

One is loath to leave the little island and row home at last. But the lazoon is quieting down to a pearly gray in the evening light, though still flushed to westward with a faint rose, which touches also the far-wary peaks of the Euganean hills. Presently the moon rises behind Murano, and ere long a welcoming path of reflected lump-and eres long a welcoming path of reflected lump-young ones, will haunt a grateful memory for many a day.

And Adelle herself may still be found there, only two years older, and still, one may hope, wreathing her flowers, tending her old folk and her little (frein, working busily at her lace, and af fording, in her gracious being, recompense for many a dislitusionment of trush.

A NOTE OF SYMPATHY

Immediately on knowing of a death in the family of a friend one should show formal recognition of the fact, even though the acquaintance be slight. Only if one is really an old friend does not send a note or go to the house, but unless some attention is paid to the affiction those who are undergoing it have no way of knowing whether the others from whom they have not a form of the same of the same in the same i meant for the use of the individual to whom they an addresses, pretty ibought to show such an attention is week or so after a tuneral, for those in affiction are more than apt to feel that their grief is quickly forgetten by their, friends, who are all syiparby at first. It is not necessary what any note shall accompany the box, but the recip-ture of the second of the second of the control of
