THE POLITE CHICKEN.

Since the advent of high-priced corn and hops feeding floors of a more permanent nature than those made of wood are receiving a good deal of attention, writes L. E. Troeger, in Orange Judd Farmer, the advantages of a floor of some kind of material like brick or cement over plank used has been argued. There are a good many feeding floors made of the first named material to be found throughout the corn belt, and without exception they are proving a good investment.

In short, the main points in favor of a feeding floor of permanent nature is that it is a feeder, as it prevents feed from being trampled to the mud; it provides a solid foundation for troughs, prevents mudholes around troughs, and it contributes to the health of the pigs by lessening the chances of infection by intestinal parasites. It is practical, as well as some new to can of the floor with a shovel every day when the floor is used for growing pigs, which removes thousands of worms, and there are few that are not to a certain extent.

The accompanying illustration shows the main points in a feeding floor that combines all the best features with cheapness. This is constructed as follows: Select a well-drained spot in the lot, remove all rubbish and litter till a solid earth surface is secured. Level the surface, and if there are any soft spots fill with clay if obtainable, and tramp firm. On this surface spread an inch of sand or fine gravel, and with a broom or brush spread it as to be smooth. The same material should be rolled if possible, at least, made as solid as can be with the means at hand. In the meantime the retaining walls or concrete six inches wide and ten or twelve inches high, so that the base will rest on firm soil. The corners may be reinforced with old iron rods or wire if such material is at hand.

The bricks should now be laid, breaking joints, and when all laid a half inch of fine sand should be spread over the surface. It is a firm foundation is provided for the brick there will be no danger of the brick heaving or working. The bricks should not be set in the floor, as slip will sour under them in warm weather and rats may burrow through them.

Columbus Busby, a white-faced Hereford, was imported from Queen Victoria's royal herd. Columbus weighs 2,300 pounds and is valued at $7,500. He has been fed no grain for three years.

meats were ever put on the farmer's table:

For each 100 pounds of meat take two pounds of sugar and four pounds of salt. Mix well and when the meat is first cut rub it well with pure salt on the flesh side. Let it lie a day or two and then drain out all blood that may be left. Divide the sugar and salt mixture in three equal parts. Use one part on the meat and pack it in a barrel. It should then be allowed to lie three or four days when it should be rubbed with another portion of the mixture and three or four days later repeat the operation with the remainder. It should then be packed tightly in a barrel. After lying three or four days it is ready to hang up. It must be kept in a cellar or some place where it will not freeze while the curing process is going on. When applying the salt and sugar mixture it is more convenient if one has two barrels to use at the same time.

FARMERS CURE THEIR MEATS

This May Be Done Rather Easily and Flavor of Product Much Finer—Delicious at Certain Seasons.

(By R. C. MILLER)

In these days of salt-peter, benzoate of soda, formate and other dopes used by the big manufacturers in the curing of nearly everything we eat, I wonder why more of our farmers do not preserve their own foods, particularly meats. It seems to me there is more danger in the use of preservatives in the use of meats than in preserving else, and pickling of meats on the farm is such a simple matter that every man who kills his own pigs should in addition to hams and bacon put down a barrel of meat pickled. Properly cared for, it is delicious at certain seasons of the year. The old farm in Virginia the following method is always used. No better

WHY?

Because it is right at the edge of Greater Jacksonville, the fastest growing city in the country. Jacksonville Heights farms begin one mile from where land is selling in town lots at the rate of $3,250.00 per acre.

Because it was practically the first of all the Florida colonies to develop and settle—on account of its unsurpassed soil, location, altitude and cheapest shipping facilities. Because 2700 farms have been sold to date and a population of about 700 souls sprung up in one year—and the lands are now settling at the rate of 40 families per month.

Because the Purchasers of Jacksonville Heights Lands Have Made Good

Settlers and farmers have succeeded. Prices and values have advanced—four schools have been erected. Hard surface roads constructed. Telephone line established connecting up with Jacksonville local telephone. Hotel buildings erected. 210 farms fenced and being developed all in a little over one year.

Because it is the Closest Colony to the Best and Fastest Growing City in Florida

We opened our sale on April, 1909, at $20.00 per acre. We have about 200 tracts left, now selling at the advanced price of $30.00 per acre subject to another advance January 1st, 1911.
