THE AGE OF DONNA

BY RANDALL PARISH
AUTHOR OF "DONNA HAVANA" ETC.

SYNOPSIS. The story begins with the introduction of John Stephens, a young man of fortune, who is interested in the young woman, Donna, who is a beautiful girl of twenty.

"But Now We Both Know." I continued to gaze at her my heart throbbing with a love which became sacrifice.

"You mean you are going back to Europe?" She shrugged her shoulders, her teeth gleaming. "Out, monsieur! I go with madam to London, to Paris; I will have plaisir."

"I have been wondering," I said, slowly, "whether you intend to report us as soon as you make land. No doubt you heard the story of the Sea Queen at Valparaiso, and have already guessed up the names of the survivors of the crew of that yacht."

"What vessel is this?" "The El Cid, Valparaiso is Buenos Ayres—a coast-trader." "And the other? Do they live?" "All but Sanchez; he died the night after our rescue. Kelly was the only one who survived; he was fairly good, but he did not get over it. Do, Nova was very badly frozen, but Cole was out on deck yesterday."

"I lay there looking at her, striving valiantly to put all these horrors away, and to face the present and the future. My headlight lightened, for I could no longer keep back the one question which trembles on my lips."

"That you, Doris, you!" In his whole outfit on the rail, he was a speck of white, and he looked like a man who had been through a mill. "You're all good for a spell of life yet."

"I have been a coward," she faltered. "I have not said anything to you, but I have not even told my name to these men on board. I was afraid the knowledge might fall on their ears; besides, I wanted to know you."

"I looked at her, my heart beating, my voice trembling as I spoke. "You—what are you going to—do?" "I have been a coward," she faltered. "I have not said anything to you, but I have not even told my name to these men on board. I was afraid the knowledge might fall on their ears; besides, I wanted to know you."
