LITTLE BY LITTLE President Taft has come into direct line with one of the Roosevelt policies, and he will follow it in the future as he has been following it for some weeks. It will be the rule at the summer capital at Beverly, Mass., as it is today the fixed rule of procedure in the White House.

The Roosevelt policy which President Taft finally has adopted as his own is the method of receiving visitors which was in force during the colonies' tenure of office. It is possible that President Taft never will be able to adopt the Roosevelt policy of getting rid of his visitors, because the two men are constitutionally different in at least one respect. It must be said, however, that the Roosevelt plan of receiving guests has done a good deal to save the tempers of White House visitors and the time of Mr. Taft.

As everybody knows, an addition was made to the White House offices some time ago. In the Roosevelt days callers went into the cabinet room and from there either went into the adjoining room, where the president sat, or waited while Mr. Roosevelt came out and made a circuit of the cabinet room, speaking to one caller after another and getting through with his work quickly and yet without giving offense.

Now President Taft has a circular room all to himself, and while the visitors are allowed the two big rooms outside, it is from these rooms they find their way to the president's presence, being let in eight or ten at a time, and not one at a time, as was the case when Mr. Taft first took office.

The president has adopted the Roosevelt method of passing from visitor to visitor learning the wants of each and trying to be seen to suit each caller and to get rid of him as quickly as courtesy will permit. President Taft, however, is a good natured and is so humanly interested in matters not connected with politics or legislation that of his own volition he flingers long frequent looks with individual visitors, and while the method of receiving them is a measure it cannot offset the delay that comes from the president's apparent desire to have every guest put into good humor and to leave with a smile in his face.

At the outset of the Taft administration visitors saw him one at a time and the one who was talking to him did not feel the spurs which which is now felt by the presence in the room of half a dozen or a dozen other visitors, all eagerly waiting their turn and occasionally shifting restlessly in their seats because of the time that the one who has the president's ear is taking up.

President Roosevelt, just as President Taft, was humanly interested in a great many things which did not affect public matter. For instance, if a well-known sportsman called Mr. Roosevelt would perhaps talk to him for half an hour about big game shooting or the best way to reach the haunts of some wild creature which the colonel never had had the pleasure of meeting at the end of the gun. One of President Taft's hobbies is baseball, and every league team that visits Washington calls at the White House, where its members talk of curves, drop balls and other things in their own way, but the one who has the president's ear is taking up.

President Taft's good nature is proverbial. During the late spring and early summer in Washington school children literally by the thousands poured into the capital. It seems that it is the children of the nation who are the most persistent of the pupils of the president. In cases where the children's school entertainments during the winter admission (thereof). The money that is thus obtained is used to pay the expenses of the pupils to Washington. In cases where the children's school entertainments during the winter admission (thereof). The money that is thus obtained is used to pay the expenses of the pupils to Washington.

One day at the White House there appeared a delegation of 450 school children. The president had a number of appointments with senators and congressmen, but he took no notice of the distance. Notwithstanding this he told his secretary that the door should be thrown open and that the school children should be admitted. He not only made them a speech, but he shook hands with each one and had a word beyond the purview of "Good to see you," to say to each pupil as he went by.

The story of the welcome which the 450 children had went abroad and for days the president's meetings were busy with the work of welcoming the children. The children were accompanied by several teachers, who chaperon them and make preparations for their sightseeing. As soon as they reach the White House they are seated in congress from the district or districts in which the schools are situated are called upon, for victims that never come. "Doctor Kagi" has more usefulness than can be conveniently attend to, and "Doctor Palmer-Denist" stands ready to inflict his name on all hapless applicants in search of relief.

"Doctors Good, Goodkind, Goodfellow, Mayfield, Caldwell, Goding and Goss" should never lack for victims, and "Yours-The Undertaker" gets there with both feet.
