LAY O DREAM

Days of dream—the summer days when
 Across the hills
 Bave for laughing breezes murmuring
 When you look across the fields to the distant
 And the breeze sing a song never understood.
 But a world of quietness, soothing, silent.

Splendid tide days are these where the
 flowers blaze
 In a scented glory all along the grassy ways.

Wild rose nodding in the wind and holly-
 hocks glow
 Where they stand as sentinels solemnly
 on guard.

Honey-suckle tossing forth its scented
 air
 Till they break in perfume spray where the hillops lift.

Aye, and white, white clouds that sail
 through the sky
 Sending down a myotic hail be the soul of joy.

Gold and purple in the dusk and silver in
 the dawn
 Casting racing shadows that speed down
 the fields and on—

Shining in a thousand shapes and glittering
 in the sun
 Till you say eyes half close at all the music done.

Days of dream! A brook that stings and bubbles to the stones.
 Casting the treasures that the spendthrift summer owns.

And the hush above it all—the hush that
 is a song
 Which the heart has hungered for these many days and long.

Can the little road that leads and rambles up hill
 Ever lead our feet again back to the noisy town?

Unhappy One,
 Gladys Van Rox is of a sorrowful
 complexion, she sighs miserably.

"Why this gloom?" asks her bosom
 friend.

"I am unhappy," confides Gladys.
 "Mamma wants me to marry the duke of Sunbhair."

"Oh, perfectly fine! And you are sure to your—"

"There is no other love affair, Gwendolyn."

"Then why are you unhappy because your mamma wants you to marry the duke?"

"The duke doesn't seem to want to marry me."

Straining for Effect.

"What! in the name of time is that dish?" asks the patron, pointing to a line on the menu which reads:

"Lwlyrwbwyywylwlylwllylwllyw"

The head waiter smiles condescendingly
 and explains:

"Just a little idea of my own, sir. It really is Welsh rabbit."

Modern Progress.

We hold it truth, with him who sings
 On one clear harp, that soon or later
 A man may rise to higher things
 If he don't miss the elevator.

Tender, Yet Strong.

"Ah," says the sighs, with the glow
 of romance in her glowing eyes, "how deeply the spring affects one!"

"Yes," agrees he.

"Does it not unconsciously fill your mind with longings for the tender, yet strong, elements of a happy life?"

"If you mean young onions, I'm desperately fond of them."

Just So.

Every girl has picked out a romantic stage name that she will use when she realizes her ambition to tread the boards.

A Matter of Principle.

"John," says the contractor to his foreman, "I will have to leave matters in your hands today. See that these foundation walls are filled with rubble in the center and faced with brick so as to appear to be made in six courses, as per specifications. You might have the boys use a little more gravel and less hair in that mortar,
 too."

"All right, sir. Will you be back again today?"

"No. I've got a suit in a justice court against a swindling tailor who made me some clothes that were half cotton when he guaranteed them to be all wool."

Can It Be?

"Papa," asks the little son, of the cold storage magnate, "where do all the mosquitoes come from?"

"They hatch from eggs," replies the mother.

"But, papa, where in the world do they get their many mosquito eggs? Do they keep them in cold storage?"

The Art of Tailoring and Dressmaking

"There is hardly a woman of 20, but what, in her younger days, was taught the art of the seamstress. It was part of her education and was not only considered an accomplishment, but was a source of great economy to the family. Today there is hardly a girl of 20 who knows much about such an art."

This statement was made by a man who had studied the subject thoroughly.

Another man who knows, said: "The dressmaker, except in large cities, is fast becoming extinct, in spite of the fact that there never was such a splendid field for trained talent as today, for the carefull-dressed woman simply will not wear ready-made suits and coats."

It is not so much the fault of women today, that so few of them understand dressmaking, as it is the fault of the men who have neglected to teach them to sew and to fashion things for their personal and family wear.

BUT WHERE CAN THEY LEARN?

It is the purpose of this College to give the art of sewing. The average woman wants to do something useful in her spare time. And there are few ways that afford such profitable returns as in making her own clothes.

DRESSMAKING A PROFITABLE BUSINESS

This College gives a course of training that enables any woman to become a good dressmaker on tailors.

The dressmaker who receives her instructions at a Keister College is always in demand. She is taught every phase of the business with a thoroughness that makes her complete mistress of the most difficult parts of the craft.

She is taught the system which enables her to take measurements and draught any kind of a pattern. She learns to cut and fit, and all that remains is a few weeks' experience in applying the knowledge gained, which can be done right here in the College.

The cost is ridiculously small compared to what is learned. $25 FOR THE FULL COURSE.

The demand for Keister pupils to take good positions is greater than we can supply. Call or write for further information.
