

WALSH'S LETTER PUBLISHED

For Benefit of Women who Suffer from Female Ills

Minneapolis, Minn.—"I was a great sufferer from female troubles which caused a general weakness and broken down condition of the system. I read so much of what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for other suffering women I felt sure it would help me, and just as it did help me wonderfully. My pains all left me. I grew stronger, and in three months I was a perfectly well woman. I want this letter made public to show the benefit women may derive from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. JOHN G. MORGAN, 215 Second St., North, Minneapolis, Minn.

Hundreds of uncollected and genuine testimonials of like above prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Beware of cheaply made, exclusively from roots and herbs. Women who suffer from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

If you want special advice write to Mrs. Pinkham. Her replies are strictly confidential. For 20 years she has been helping sick women in this way, free of charge. Don't hesitate—write at once.

Qualified. A prominent western attorney tells of a boy who once applied at his office for work. "This boy was bright looking and I rather took to him. 'Now, my son,' said I, 'if you come to work for me you will occasionally have to write telegrams and take down telephone messages. Hence a pretty high degree of schooling is essential. Are you fairly well educated?' 'The boy smiled confidently. 'I'll be,' he said, 'Independent.'

But I am wandering again. That is the difficulty with the unprofessional story-teller: He yaws back and forth and carries overboard when he hasn't any further use for them and drops them. He forgets the coffee pot and other small essentials, and if he carries a love affair, he mutters a fervent "Allah be praised" and then, as if he were drenched with adventures at the matrimonial dock at the end of the final chapter.

I put in a thoroughly unsatisfactory afternoon. Time dragged eternally. I dropped into a summer vaudeville, and thought some ties at a haberdashery. I was bored, but unexpectant. I had no notion of what was to come. Nothing unusual had ever happened to me; friends of mine had some-thing to do with the high seas, but I ate my solitary dinner at a downtown restaurant. "Haven't you troubles enough," I reflected, "without looking for more? Haven't Bad News gone home, with a bad news book for next week? Otherwise aren't you comfortable? Isn't your house in order? Do you want to sell a pony in order to have a literary done over on his master? Or the drawing room in gold? Do you want somebody to count the empty cigarette boxes lying around every morning?"

He Knew the Kind. Little Edward, aged four, was an only child. He was anxious for a baby sister, and was talking of it one day with a friend of the family in the friend's family was a baby girl of one year. The lady said, "Edward, you may have my baby; she is pretty and sweet. 'Oh,' said Edward, 'I don't want an old lady. I want a bran new one with soft and talcum powder.'—Red Hen.

Mathematical Request. Little Mary, seven years old, was saying her prayers. "And, God," she petitioned at the close, "make seven times six forty-eight."

"Why, Mary, why did you say that?" asked her mother. "Cause that the way I wrote it in 'amination in school today, and I want it to be right."—Lippincott's.

Taking Father's Job. "Why should you beg? You are both young and strong. 'That is right, but my father is old and weak and can no longer support me.'—Meggendorfer Blatter.

SYNOPSIS. I gathered, and the young woman wished to go alone. I drank three cups of coffee, which accounted for my wakefulness later, and shamelessly crunched the tobacco before me. The woman's protest evidently went for nothing; across the table the man grunted monosyllabic replies and grew more and more lowering and sinister. Once, during a brief unexpected planissimo in the music, her voice came to me sharply.

CHAPTER II. A Torn Telegram. I lunched alone at the Gilmore house, and went back to the city at once. The sun had lit the main street under a heavy sky. The boulevard was full of cars flying countryward for the Saturday, green fields and babbling girls. I gritted my teeth and thought of McKnight at Richmond. And then, for the first time, I associated John Gilmore's granddaughter with the "West" that McKnight had so fruitfully fang at.

I bought my berth after waiting in a line of some eight or ten people. When, step by step, I had almost reached the window, a tall woman whom I had not noticed before spoke to me from my elbow. She had a ticket and money in her hand. "Will you try to get me a lower when you buy yours?" she asked. "I have traveled for three nights in uppers."

I consented, of course; beyond that I hardly noticed the woman. I had a vague impression of height and the certain amount of staleness, but the crowd was pushing behind me, and some one was standing on my foot.

"Which Will You Have, Lower Ten or Eleven?" I got two lowers easily, and, turning with the change and berths, held out the tickets. "Which will you have?" I asked. "Lower 10 or lower 10?" "It makes no difference," she said. "Thank you very much indeed."

At random I gave her lower 11, and called a porter to help her with her luggage. I followed them leisurely to the train shed, and ten minutes more saw us under way. I looked into my car, but it presented the peculiarly unattractive appearance common to sleepers. The berths were made up; the center aisle was a path between walls of dingy, breeze-repelling curtains, while the two seats at each end of the car were piled high with suit cases and umbrellas. The perspiring porter was trying to be in six places at once; somebody has said that Pullman porters are black so they won't show the dirt, but they certainly show their.

Nine-fifteen was an outrageous hour to go to bed, especially since I sleep little or not at all on the train, so I hunted for the porter and together we passed the time until nearly 11 with cigarettes and a magazine. It was a warm night, and before turning in I stood a short time in the vestibule. The train had been stopping at frequent intervals, and, finding the brakeman there, I asked the trouble. It seemed that there was a hot-box on the next car, and that not only were we late, but we were delaying time on the second section, just behind, beginning to feel unpleasantly drowsy, and the air was growing cooler and wet.

History may be doubtful as to the identity of the man who fastened the "Show Me" tradition on the state of Missouri, but she will not be in the case of the man who fastened the "Man Higher Up." The first use of this expression was made by Elmer B. Adams, judge of the federal bench in St. Louis. Even the very case in which he used the expression has been fixed, and the arch-ecologist who have been carrying on the investigation defy the world to show them (being Missouri men), why and where they are wrong.

Certain claims that the phrase, "Get the Man Higher Up," was first used by Theodore Roosevelt are asserted by the historians in question, who have gone into the inquiry with all the caution and presentation of true scientists. Nowhere in the folklore of the vaude-
