NOTES FROM THE PEOPLE.

MR. ECCENTRIC: If we are as you say the second town in the county, if we have passed some others in population and size, let us prove our progress by having sewers and school-room capacity for children. Instead of putting the little ones in a cage, off a crowded hall, let us give a safe way to and from the rooms and room for all. We can do this by building on a site away from the present building, thus saving our nice school grounds. We have a few desirable things in our limits. Let us hold what we have. Let us have a new building and in it one large room suitable for public exercises and not depend on our churches.

PRO BONO PUBLICO.

EDITOR OF THE ECCENTRIC: Can't something be done to save at least a part of the school lawn which has for years given our pupils an object lesson on neatness and has made them proud of their school grounds, allow them to over run the whole lawn and you give a lesson for swimming.

What can you expect but ill health, tuberculosis, etc., when you put 70 children in a room which should seat 40 and even take the hallway for school purposes, shutting off means of egress and making a fire trap.

Children packed into a school room like so many crackers in a box, cannot be healthy, cannot be happy, can have no pride in their school surroundings, no love of beauty or neatness.

This state of affairs exists because our people have voted down every sane proposition for a new school that might give us room for the children and an audience room for school entertainments. Don't blame the school board, blame the voters.

THE LYCEUM THEATER.

Next week, with the coming of Thomas E. Shea as the attraction at the Lyceum next Sunday, the patrons of this house will have an opportunity to see him at his best.

Mr. Shea brings with him an entire new production for his new play "A Self Made Man." This is the piece Mr. Al H. Woods promised him last season and from previous indications it will prove one of the best new things of the season.

Mr. Woods, who is sponsor for Mr. Shea's present tour, has provided the clever actor with an excellent cast and the patrons of the Lyceum have a treat in store for them.

This engagement opens with the Sunday matinee, and in addition to which the regular Wednesday and Saturday matinees will be given.

HUPP FARMS' STOCK AT FAIR.

The Hupp Farms exhibit of hogs at the State Fair was the winner of valuable prizes. This exhibit, five in number, consisted of one aged boar, the Great Prince Bacon, 980 lbs. one year boar, Superb 133000, and three under year sows.

This herd of five Berkshires won 3 prizes; the most important being one of cash prize of $50 offered by the American Berkshire Association, for the best under yearling boar, consisting of one boar and three sows.

They also made several very important sales at the State Fair, and also booked many orders for the coming year.

CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to thank all our friends and townspeople for their many acts of kindness and words of sympathy during the late illness and after the death of our late wife and mother, also for the beautiful floral offerings. Such neighborly acts can never be forgotten.

UNLOOKER

"Riley's roses"—wreathed in rhyme, Joyous as the summer-time, Honey-sweet and jewel-fair—Roses, roses, red and rare.

Poet of the golden heart, Wreath more roses by your art! In truth is the breath of spring And the whole world's blossoming.

Aye, and hidden deep within it, What makes us all akin—What God's work is fashioned of, Humble faith and human love!

Riley's roses! Dark and dawn Of the wonder days ago, And the world's blossoming Of a poet that bursts in bloom!

The Conundrum Man Again.

He came into the office with a breezy smile, stamped nobly to the desk of the busy editor, and with the rhyming dictionary and the fountain pen, and said:

"I've been so busy with the holiday doling that I couldn't get around, but as I was passing a little idea came to me and I ran in to suggest it to you. You can use it if you like, or not, just as you choose. Live and let live is my motto, and I believe in passing on the notions that come to me, too."

"Yes. How serious is it this time?" Interrupts the hirling scribe, making a cross mark on his copy to show where the rhyme falls.

"What is the difference between a man with a red nose and a constant thirst—that is the difference between him and an Indian cowboy."

"The difference between him and a shoeing would be that one shows the booze and the other bows the shoes."

"But that isn't what I asked. What is the difference between—"

"I know your question. One is a bootlegger, both are the enemy of the Six-shooter gang. Good morning."

"You didn't get it right. One has a red proboscis and the other is a red nose process."

And the angry wind caught the raindrops and hurled them hither and yon in the wild wrath of the elements, while from the echelets any there came no word of comfort.

The Thirty-Six-inch Braids.

"The office of thirty-six-inch braids is necessary—Fashion Notes She sat in silence and in gloom. She would not wonder for her room Because the heart within her burned For that for which her fancy yearned. All melancholy slighted the maid. She was a thirty-six-inch braids."

In vain her father showed his power, Platitudes to emphasize and words. In vain her mother said to spite "Two wretched and true as the price. This statement all the while she played: "I want a thirty-six-inch braids."

They brought her coffee, cordials, fruit. They wanted to cheer her with a tale. They teased the lye in merriment. They tried to soothe her with after-dinner. She murmured all the while they played: "I want a thirty-six-inch braids."

She would not go to show or dance. She would not show her face to the light. She simply sat in dumb despair. Her hair she combed with slow and sad. And stilled, as day by day she faded: "I want a thirty-six-inch braids."

At last, exhausted nerves and breath, She sorrowed her love away to die. A per, then, at her own gate. She stood with all the while she faded: "I want a thirty-six-inch braids."

"No, please," exclaimed her maid, "I want a thirty-six-inch braids."

An Expert Opinion.

"What," asks the eager youth, "is the difference between a girl and 'artificiality'?"

The gray-bearded philosopher thoughtfully rubbed his whiskers and revolved the problem in his mind. "I shall endeavor to make it plain and simple to you," he remarks at last. "On the one hand, consider the portrait of a woman's face on the other hand, consider the face itself. Art and artificiality—paint and powder—see."

A Kindly Offer.

"Excuse me, sir," says the gentleman who enters the room, clapping his thumb tightly in the fingers of his other hand. "Take your choice as to hands. I've cut my finger. Have you some cornplasters?"

"I'm sorry," says the occupant of the office. "I haven't a bit."

"Well, could you let me have a two-cent stamp? I'll stick that over the wound."

"Haven't a single stamp," regretfully answers the clerk. "But I'll let you have two postal cards."

The Future Romance.

Woman for the first time had been permitted to sit upon a jury. The verdict had been rendered, and the young woman who had been one of the twelve was telling her friend about it.
