THE EDITOR.
"It is the average public to whom the editor must make his appeal, and every editor knows that the average man is fair, and just and appreciative. Each editor has hundreds of such on his list. He is the "Old Subscriber." He is the man who takes the paper through storm and sunshine. If he sees something in the paper he does not like, he does not inflict capital punishment on the editor by stopping the paper. He has ideas of his own but he is willing that other men should have them. If the paper misuses the mails he takes it good humoredly. If he is asked to pay his subscription he does so with a chuckle and declares that he should have paid it before. If he reads an opinion in his paper with which he differs, he writes the publisher a good letter or discusses the question with him in a friendly way. The "Old Subscriber" is the backbone and life of a newspaper's support. One of them is worth a dozen of the hysterical, and "also my paper" sort, who fly into a rage when they cannot run the whole shop. We here propose a toast to the "Old Subscriber" - the friend and comfort of the editor - the man "who stands without hitching" - the good old standby who says without grumbling, differs without grumbling, differs without quarreling, helps without ostentation, gives praise and criticism when each falls due, and who is welcome in every newspaper office in the land. Let him wear broadcloth or overalls. Long may he live. - Sparta Sentinel.

Coming and Going.
"What six dollars for dyeing that cape?"
"Outrageous!"
"Well, ma'am, the increased cost of living has caused us to increase the cost of dyeing."
