

A NARRATIVE OF METROPOLITAN LIFE

By CHARLES KLEIN AND ARTHUR HORNBLOW ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS

SYNOPSIS.

Howard Jeffrey, banker's son, under "Not at all," he questioned indignantly...

He felt in singularly good spirits.

"Where are the women?" asked Annie, trying to keep down the lump that rose chokingly in her throat.

"Isn't dreadful," she murmured. "Not at all," he questioned indignantly...

"Richard Brewster!" exclaimed Howard. "He's my father's lawyer!"

"What did he say?" he asked eagerly. "I asked him to come publicly to your support and to give you legal assistance..."

"What was that condition?" he demanded quickly. "That I consent to a divorce..."

"You're a brave little woman!" cried Howard. Noticing her pale, anxious face, he said with sympathy...

of one of the most brilliant legal minds in the country, yet in this very office had been preparing some of the most sensational victories ever recorded in the law courts.

Visitors to Judge Brewster's office were not many. A man of such renown was naturally expensive. Few could afford to retain his services...

"Very well, judge," answered the clerk. "He looked at her longly, and then he said: 'That man been in today?'"

"What is it, Mr. Jones?" demanded the clerk, handing him a card. "A lady to see you, judge," said the clerk, handing him a card.

"What did he say?" he asked eagerly. "I asked him to come publicly to your support and to give you legal assistance..."

"What was that condition?" he demanded quickly. "That I consent to a divorce..."

"You're a brave little woman!" cried Howard. Noticing her pale, anxious face, he said with sympathy...
