SYNOPSIS.

Howard Jeffrey, banker's son, under the evil influence of Robert Underwood...
"Have you anything more to say to me, captain?"
"No," replied the captain hesitatingly.

CHAPTER XI.—Continued.

"Not this lady," said the boy. "The other lady, I think she is Callera, or Jenkins, or something like that."
The captain waved his hand toward the door.

CHAPTER XII.

The American merely loaves a sensation, and the bigger and more blood-curdling it is the better.
"Let's go," said the boy, "I'll fight you, captain, to the last ditch."
"Quickly she opened the door and disappeared."

man, and in all quarters of the city there was universal sympathy for the Howard Jeffrey.
"Everybody pointed out to me that I should think that this splendid, upright man, whose whole career was without a single stain, who had risked his life and courage gallantly during the civil war, should have such disgrace brought upon him in his old age."

As one matter of course, the standing and influence of the prisoner's family. Thus, on the morning after the trial, Judge Brewster, the famous lawyer, it was said, had already been approached by the prisoner's attorney, and had declined to take the case.
"Is Mr. Jeffrey in?"

"To her utter amazement the butler offered no objection to her entering.
"Is Mr. Jeffrey in?"

"The young man who has inherited my name has chosen his own path in life. I am grieved to say that his conduct at college, his marriage, has completely separated him from my family, and I have quite made up my mind that in no way or manner can I be connected with him."

"That's the house where the murderer of Robert Underwood lived?"
"Indeed, yes, it was the house where the day that the crime was made public was thronged with curious people."

"Well, boys," he said cheerily. "Anything doing?"
"May I speak to you a moment?"

"I am not a reporter, Mr. Jeffrey. I am your son's wife, Mr. Jeffrey."

"I don't recognize—"
"Madam, I beg to say no more."
"Let me see your card."
