The Plague of Rubbers. One may hope, in spite of the metaphors, to avoid the breath of the deadly up tree; one may, by great good fortune, succeed in blinking the eye of the basilisk; one might even dodge the attention of Cerberus and Argos; but no man, dead or alive, can escape the gaze of the Rubberer.

New York is the Constantinople of the East. There are many of course who go there by way, making money, without turning to the right or the left, but their is a tribe abroad wonderfully composed, like the Martians, solely of eyes and means of locomotion.—From "A Queen in Rubber," by O. Henry.

Queen a Lover of Art. Queen Elizabeth of Belgium is devoted to art. She is not an art collector, but she is a keen student of the work of her subjects and passes several hours a day viewing paintings, sculpture and other objects of artistic creation. She buys a great many objects, but in her selection she does not rely on the advice and suggestion of others. She buys what she likes and her taste generally are approved by the scholars in Brussels whom she knows thoroughly, and with whom she argues capably on many disputed points. Recently she bought a still life picture, painted by Mlle. Renner, a young artist in Brussels, who has hung it in her private apartments. The composition of the painting is one of extreme simplicity, the chief colors being dark reds and blues.

Editor Waxen Sarcastic. A Kansas editor sarcastically announces that he wants to buy a sack of flour, a pair of three-button trousers, and a straw hat, and that he is ready to receive the bill on the same. He says that is the way the merchants do when they want two dollars' worth of job work.—Atholton Globe.

Women and Dress. In the matter of dress variety is to the civilized woman what finery is to the savage. Says the London Spectator. The more civilized women become, the more variety they must have. Things have come to such a pass now that the daily papers must tell the news of the fashions; the gravest journal dare not ignore them. Side by side with the affairs of the realm and the affairs of court and city crime stand the kaleidoscopic details of colored stuffs and fashionable styles which delight the feminine public.

Charm in Sincerity. "Sincerity always has a charm of its own," says the London Spectator. Fighting, you are compelled to admire their earnestness and singleness of purpose.—"Master of the Vineyard," by Myrtle Reed.

Drink and Idleness. Intemperance is fostered as much by ennui as by physical debility. A mind fully occupied has far less disposition to excess. The hardest drinking occurs in stagnant provincial towns.—London Outlook.
