Howard looked at her curiously. He did not know if she was speaking to him earnestly. Almost impatiently he exclaimed: "Why do you talk in this way against your own interests?"

"I'm not talking against myself, Howard. I want you to be happy, and you're not happy. You can't be happy unless you are content. Now be honest with me—can you?"

"No," she answered, frankly, "not unless you are." "Whatever happiness I've had in life I owe to you and God knows you've had nothing but trouble from me."

"I'm not talking against myself, Howard. I want you to be happy, and you're not happy. You can't be happy unless you are content. Now be honest with me—can you?"

"You're going to accept his offer, Howard. You owe it to yourself, to me, to the world, to the position you are entitled to, to the position you are in with me prevents you from taking—"

"Howard drummed his fingers on the tablecloth and looked out of the window. It seemed to him as though he no longer had the same candid ring as he replied."

"No," he wanted to speak to me about the thing. He wanted to know if he paused awkwardly, and then added: "I admit I've promised to consider it, but—"

THE END

THE MAGICIAN

During the presidency of Mr. Tyler I had occasion to call on Daniel Webster, then secretary of state.

"Welcome, sir! No focus pocus upon my papers," covering them with his arms.

"You, a magician, an office seeker, signer?"

"Yes, sir. You might give me 100,000 to count and watch me closely, I returned them."

"I returned them," he exclaimed with lively animation, "there is no chance for me to be better manager than you."
