You Have Neighbors Who Use Home-made Acetylene For Lighting and Cooking

For the asking you can have the name and the address of the nearest one. Then you can, if you wish, make an evening call and get the facts first hand.

All told we have sold no less than six thousand Pilot Acetylene Plants to the people in this state.

These people are our friends. Anyone of them will be proud to show you just how these Pilot plants work—how they automatically mix the gas producing stone, Union Carbide, with plain water. How they make just enough acetylene to keep the lights and the range going—no more, no less.

They will show you also how the Pilot starts making this gas when the lights are turned on—and stops when the lights are turned off. How this gas is piped to handsome light fixtures in every room in the house—as well as to big, round safety lights in all barns and out-buildings.

The women folks in these homes will be glad to show you just what a boon the Acetylene range is—how it furnishes heat on top that can be regulated with a little valve—how it does away with handling wood, coal and ashes and makes the kitchen work easy.

You cannot judge the Pilot Acetylene Light Plant by what you have seen and heard of other Acetylene plants.

You must see a Pilot plant and talk to the people it works for. Then you will have a clearer understanding as to why ever two hundred thousand country families now have made Acetylene indispensable.

The Pilot makes Acetylene the right way—makes it so well that it provides country homes with even a better light and fuel than the gas which twenty million city people are enjoying.

After you have inspected a Pilot plant we will leave it to you to say whether it doesn't make the wisest, the most brilliant, and most beautiful light you have ever seen.

We will leave it to you also to say whether or not Acetylene Acetylene fixtures are not much safer than oil lamps, which can be tipped over.

As a matter of fact—only two accidents have been charged to the misuse and abuse of Pilot Acetylene, while ten thousand accidents have been charged to oil illuminants in a single year.

That is why the Oswald Electric, makers of Pilot Light Plants, has grown to be the largest concern of its kind in the world.

Complete Pilot Light Plants may be purchased from dealers in Oswald Acetylene Company products. These dealers are permanently located in some three thousand different towns.

In this district the undersigned distributors of Pilot Plants will be glad to mail you the Oswald Company's free advertising book, telling the whole Acetylene story—with full details about the installation of the Pilot, its cost, economy, etc. Just address a postal to
