"Back to back the sheriff of Lincola county and the most noted murderer in the southwest stood. "Now. Billy." cautioned Garret, "don't shoot unless I tell you to. Remember that without meyour life is not worth two blis today."

It was impossible to tell what was working in the mind concealed behind the childhaf face of the Kid. It was equally as impossible to read the Kid. It was equally as impossible to read with apparent unconcern. The crowl was and feared the Kid. With only Garrett to fight, the members might have risked it. With a revolver in the Kid's hand, they healtsted.

Held at bay, Garrett placed the Kid aboard the trail which arrived a few moments later.

The Kid was tried in another county. He had to Irlends and no defense. There were pleaty of witnesses against him now that he was a prisoner. He was defended by an atforce who made a brave fight. But he was sentenced to be hanged at Ligono in July, 1831. He was brought back and confined in a jail built after the manner of Mexican houses, of adoab brick, with thick walls around a court or patio.
