How to Reduce Expense.

Every merchant is in business for profit—not gross profit but net profit. Gross profit is the difference be-tween the purchase price plus selling cost and the selling

Every merchant knows that if the selling price.

Every merchant knows that if the selling price does not exceed the purchase price and selling cost combined at the end of the year there is no real profit coming to him out of the business. To remedy this he must do one of three things -reduce purchase price, increase selling price or reduce selling cost. A merchant may reduce the purchase price a little by buying in quantities, or watching the market and always buying safe—but the purchase price is fixed by others and he must pay their price. Of course if the article is one the merchant produces himself he may reduce the cost of production. The merchant may increase selling price, although the demand and competition have a great deal to do with fixing the selling price. But the selling cost is in the hands of each merchant, It is by manipulating selling cost that each business becomes a success or a failure. Therefore it stands each purchant-hand to reduce his selling cost.

John D. Rockefeller said: The great cost in business is waste." To do away with this waste or reduce it to a minimum is the purpose of advertising. Judicious advertising will increase sales, thus reducing selling cost and waste.

Garrick Theatre.

For the seventh week of her Detroi engracement at the Gerrick Theatre Miss Bonatelle will revive, by specia request, Henry Dikey's charming comedy drams success, "Mary Jane's Pa," in which she scored such a decided success and hit season before last. The play offers both Mr. Giles and Miss Bonatelle and the supporting company big opportunities."

Bonatelle and the support of the provided in the age of 16 years Portia Perkins, was married to Hiram Perkins, fiberary and lany. He cared much more for the patter of poets than for the ungrammatical werds of honest men. When the daughter, Lucile, was mare a halo Mary Jane, was born he neen. When the daughter, Lucile, was five and bally, Mary Jane, was born he disappeared. The play upons after if years. She has a little newpaper and reliming the years. She has a little newpaper and reliming the young leavyle, Rome Prestan, for the legislature against the readgrind, Jos Skinner, though it invites financial ruis. Skinner inflames the gossips of the village because Mrs. Perkins' hauk and is not with her.

The haukand suddenly turns us. He is hungry. She feeds him. Becaure he is the children's father she will not turn him out, not will she support him. She offers him a toba a cook at wages.

She offers him a job as cook at wages. He accepts. The village folls, like many others talk, and the situations are numerous and interesting. A little misty curtain of sentiment falls over everything, and thus "Mary Jane's Pa" contains every element of interest and holding power.
