MISS CROUDEN'S CHIEF CLIENT

By ELIZABETH SCHOEN COBB.

"I'm afraid that's what I am!" vociferated Martin Dalton, "and you've got to help me out."

Hugh Wayne, lawyer, smiled slightly. He had not the slightest reproachable sentiment of contempt for his fussy, erratic client.

"You should have remembered the old saying, 'Be wary of the victim's!'" he observed.

"She isn't a widow. She's an old maid."

"Tell you, Mr. Dalton," broke in the attorney, "I don't consider Miss Crouden in the old maid class. In fact, I admire her as a very beautiful and most estimable lady. At thirty she is the peer of any girl of sixteen in her modesty and loveliness."

"Pity you didn't marry her!" snarled Dalton. "Confound it! What induced me to make love to her, any way? It was a snare, I tell you—a deliberate plot!"

"In what way?" challenged Wayne.

"Why, I heard she was betrothed to a big estate. Come to find out, she had simply interested in a lawsuit that may drag along for years, and when it winds up all the funds eaten up in litigation. You're my lawyer—I've come to you for advice."

"Well, what do you expect me to do?" questioned Wayne.

"I'm engaged to Miss Crouden. I want her to break the engagement."

"Then why don't you go to her in a frank, manly fashion and tell her so?" asked Wayne, more disgusted than ever with his mean-spirited client.

"Well, what do you expect me to do?" questioned Wayne.

"I'm engaged to Miss Crouden. I want her to break the engagement."

"Then why don't you go to her in a frank, manly fashion and tell her so?" asked Wayne, more disgusted than ever with his mean-spirited client.

"I fear I have granted a serious mistake," she said, with a bright smile, and the soul of Wayne took hope.

Somehow he got to calling upon her. Then he became interested in the great lawsuit which involved her inheritance fortune. One day several months later Dalton met the lawyer on the street.

"I say," he observed, "I see in the papers that Miss Crouden has won her fortune, after all."

"Yes," assented Wayne.

"With I'd struck to her," remarked Dalton. "You helped as her lawyer, didn't you? Big fee, I suppose?"

"The best in the world," declared Wayne.

"Do tell—what now?"

"Herself. Miss Crouden becomes my wife next week."

FIRST AMERICAN OIL WELL

Several States Claim the Honor of Being the Pioneer in This Enormous Industry of Our Country.

The location of the first oil well in the United States is claimed by several states. The Wheeling Intelligence reviewing the oil industry of West Virginia, says there was an oil well on the banks of the Kanawha river at the present site of Charleston in 1788, before Dr. Drake well at Titusville, Pa., ushered in the petroleum industry of the world.

It is probable that there were such wells in other parts of the country as early as that, but its possibilities were so little realized that nothing was done with it beyond bottling a high quality version of the product and peddling it out as a liniment! As to the priority of these old-time wells, it is a matter of small importance, since the petroleum business dates from the famous Titusville discovery referred to by the Intelligence.

West Virginia did not become a large oil producer until about twenty years ago, although oil operations of varying character have been going on at intervals in that state almost since the beginning of development in Pennsylvania. There was a fairly flourishing industry prior to the Civil war, but it was crushed out during the period of hostilities for four or five years thereafter it was struggling for existence. Production reached high-water mark in 1900, when the output of the state was valued at more than 16,000,000 barrels. It has not been so large in any subsequent year, though West Virginia stands high on the list as an oil-producing state. The production for 1912 was 12,200,000 barrels. In value it exceeded that of any other year with the sole exception of the record year of 1900.
