A Generous, Quiet and Unassu ing Man Gone to His Reward.

HIS BENEFACTIONS MANY.

MIS BENEFACTIONS MANY.
Mr. Fenwick was quiet, unassuming man, said by his friends to have few faults and many virtues. He gave countless meals to the "dewnand out." and to those he had known in their palmier days, and did not end his benefactions with meals, giving many a substantial "stake" to young people he thought needed it, never expecting much of it to be repaid.
"It's all in the day's wort." he would

much of it to be repaid.
"It's all in the day work," he would say, "and I'd rather be seen by many than to refuse one deserving person."
The Salvation army and the mission workers were his pet charities. He boarded the mission workers for years without pay. Three old men occupied one table for years, never paying, until two were so old they were taken to institutions.

FIRST WITH NEWSPAPERS.
Fenwick's was the first Detroit restaurant where newspapers were served with meals. It was popular with excarsionists, who used it for a meeting place, and where they could leave their
lipon were served at one meal during the aummer season, and handreds of real, home made pies were baked in the ovens of the restaurant each day.
Many of the ragular patrons, bankers, wholesale and retail merchants and professional men, occupied the same tables year in and year out.

professional men, occupied the same tables year in and year out.

Mr. Fenwick was a bachelor, and is survived by Malcoim Fenwick, a well known missionary in Corea, four-sisters in Toronto, a niece, Andrea Fenwick, of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. Menno Eby, with whom he had lived over 35 years. He left an estate consisting of Detroit real estate, aito and mining stocks and other investmenta.

"A DESPERATE CHANCE"

From that old time comedy drama of Irish life "The Ivy Igad." which the Permanent Players at the Avenue Theater, Detroit, are producing with remarkable fieldith; this week, they will turn next week to "A Desperate Chance". This piece is founded upon the now celebrated escape from the Pittsburg prison of the Biddle Boys.

The play has been rewritten and there is a newerful mead to the results of the Pittsburg prison of the Biddle Boys.

The play has been rewritten and there a powerful moral to the story. Heart atterest is not wanting, the accae beween the warden and his little child, fter the wife and mother's escapade a gripping one. There is a reconcilition worked out in the story between usband and wife in answer to the appearance of the story of the story.

husband and wife in naswer to the ap-peals of the little girl, which part will fall to little Gladys Kremer.

The big sense of the play is the fight between the fugitives and the sherriff's posse. Considerable interest attaches to this bill locally, since the Biddle boys are said to have lived for a time at a Amhersthurg, Ont. "A Desperate Chance" was selected in deference to popular demand for this bill.
