Soils Than in Rich.

Investigations prove the high value of the common legune crops whether used in rotation or as green manure crops. Results obtained from their use are far more striking in poor soils than in rich soils. Perhaps the safest rule to apply where there is a choice of two legumes is to use the one which gives the largest total yield per acre. If these are about equal, to use the off-these are about equal, to use the off-these are about equal, to use the crops as a regular operation is seidom carried on except in orchards. In this case, there can be but little doubt that the operation is highly profitable, which is the common the control of the common tendency of the profit of the common tendency in the case of very poor cause ordinarily it is far more profits able to utilize the crop for feed and then to return the manure to the soil. MOST DESIRABLE VALUE OF SILAGE TO THE PRODUCER

Great Saver of Grain Regardless of Whether Fed to Stock Cattle or Fattening Animals.

There is no roughage which is of more importance to the producer of beef cattle than silage. The value of slage to the beef producer varies considerably and is dependent upon a large number of other factors. If rough fodders are excree or are high priced, if the grain is high priced, or the priced, if the grain is high priced, or have a greater value than if the opposite conditions exist. It is a great saver of grain regardless of whether it is to be fed to stock cattle or fattening cattle. It will lessen the grain feeding by practically the same amount as is contained in the sligge. The value will also depend somewhat upon the kind of cattle to which it is upon the kind of cattle to which it is considered in the sligge.
