

Spring Suit in Belgian Blue Serge

A plain, smart suit, distinctly youthful in suggestion and depending upon color and cut for successful style.

attached to the coat at each side, and fastens with a slyer buckle at the front.

Worn with the suit, when the red belt and collar are brought into position, is a hat which is obliged to keep pace with them.

It is not often that a suit so simply constructed achieves distinction by the mere management of color.

Miss Nell Craig Approves New Fashions

That keenness and quickness of apprehension which makes the success of the light, particular "movie" star before the inexorable camera lends weight to the importance of her judgment in the matter of clothes.

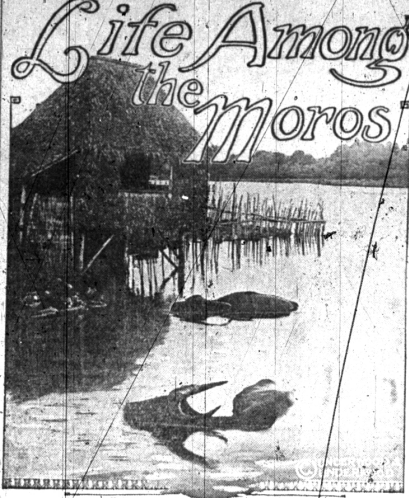

brim of black taffeta faced with black all-ribbon braid, and has a soft crown and a collar of satin.

The bodice and tunic of hem-stitched chiffon are noticeably simple, and the underbodice, or corset cover, of crepe de chine, is quite the reverse of simple, being a pretty combination of the silk with wide shadow lace.

When Hoop Skirts Were Worn. The first modern hoop skirt—representing a costume which the modistes are now threatening to revive—was the invention of Joseph Thomas.

Everyone who has ever tried to get a very small child to "put out your tongue" to open her mouth, or to get a very old man to do the same, knows how hard a matter it is to really see either the condition of the tongue or the condition of the body.

Widening gowns minus trains are fashionable this winter, since all skirts are short now. But the wedding gown, even when gutters of a train, covers the feet entirely, for, above all, such a costume may have dignity—something the abbreviated skirt never possesses.

And after all, the discomfort was not so great for we had ordered our beds, mosquito nets, etc., sent from New York, and were fortunate in finding them waiting for us at the customhouse. That reminds me of my surprise when we were obliged to pay duty on anything made outside of the United States, in spite of the fact that duty had already been collected in the United States.

At first the natives quite ignored us. I mean those we met in the streets of Jolo, for we were not at first allowed to go outside the gates you know Jolo is the smallest walled town in the world.

Remember, please, that I am speaking of the Moros, not the Filipinos, and in order to understand the great gulf which separates the two you must go to mind first and last that the Filipinos are Roman Catholics and the Moros Mohammedans, and of equal importance, the fact that the Filipinos do not want Americans to remain in the islands and the Moros are begging us to leave them.

There is one man, however, who always believed that the Moros would respond to kindness. He is Charles H. Brent, Episcopal bishop of the Philippine Islands. He longed to give them a chance of proving that they would not reject a hand held out in helpful kindness. That reminds me of some things a man said to me when I was before sailing that all I hoped to do was to hold out a hand. His reply was that if I did they would cut it off.

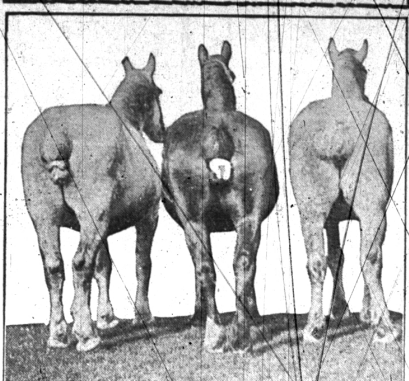

What They Sing. A North Idaho Sunday school teacher with a class of little girls was trying to get them to rehearse some songs for an entertainment. She wanted to find out what part they were singing, but she asked a little blue-eyed maiden, who replied: "Well, they're singing terrible and papa says I sing horrible, but mamma says I sing lovely." The teacher tried to suppress a smile, but the pupils all looked serious, and especially so when the little girl next to the blue-eyed maiden got up and said, "That's what I sing too." However, the glass was organized and their singing promises to be one of the treats of the entertainment.

Strategy in Tongue Inspection. Everyone who has ever tried to get a very small child to "put out your tongue" to open her mouth, or to get a very old man to do the same, knows how hard a matter it is to really see either the condition of the tongue or the condition of the body.

What's Her Hell? Those best qualified to know about it claim that the expression "What is her hell?" did not originate with General Sherman. Just now when by whom the term was first used it is impossible to say.

She Handed It to Him. "What's thy hell?" said Lucille, the waitress in a New York harem, as she handed the newspaper man a note. "A fellow comes in here a while ago and says he's wrote a song and

MOST PROFITABLE HORSE FOR THE FARMER

The Horse So Often Neglected on the Farm is the Draft Horse.

In no other one line of live stock production has there been such a lack of study or system as that of horse production. For many years the farmers have practiced haphazard methods of breeding, feeding, care and management as well as preparation for market.

There are four distinct classes suitable for production. These are the heavy drafters, carriage or coach horses, roadsters and saddle horses. Any of these are always in demand and command high prices.

The draft class can be raised with less risk and less liability to accident than colts of the lighter class. This is because he is active and slight built or built to do no serious work, and he is not so apt to be injured by a fall or by a kick.

NOTES PICKED UP IN POULTRY YARD

Little Details Make Difference Between Success and Failure With Chickens.

Keep the hens well supplied with water to drink, and see that the chill is taken off it in the cold weather. If you have not been in the habit of giving them all they need, you will be surprised at how much they will drink. They should have all they want, and that is water and food.

It is the little details that make the difference between success and failure in poultry raising. The pullets that are filling the egg basket their first winter are the ones that will be the most successful.

The egg shells from the eggs used in the kitchen should be dried and fed to the hens. They will help out the hens in some form, to prevent them laying soft shelled eggs.

Be sure to crush the shells so there will be no danger of teaching the hens to eat eggs. The very best of food without a plentiful supply of pure, fresh water will fail to increase the hens to lay.

Reduce the drinking part of your hens' ration and the egg yield will soon be reduced, for water is the principal substance in an egg and it can't be reduced.

Next to pure air, water is the cheapest thing we can supply our poultry. If the mash you feed is given to the hens in a trough, it will be invigorating, but if it becomes cold or frozen before it is consumed it is very unsuitable food, as the fowls will not eat it, and if they do, it's a cold water in the mash, which chills them.

Time for Soy Beans. Soy beans should be planted at the season most appropriate for corn or a little later, as the seed needs a warm soil for the best germination. If the crop is to be raised for hay it may be planted somewhat later when intended for seed.

New Place for Onions. Do not put the onions where they grew last year, or the onion maggot will cause you trouble. Select a new place for them, and change all the crops around. They will do better.

Getting Ready to Jump. Yearn—Is he still on the water wagon? ... No, Australia, this is a country to fight Italy partly with the help of "chickens" ... Yes, their attitude seems to be, "Pleasure take 'em!" ... Happy in the home where Red Cross is doing its best. Care to please. All grocers. Adv.
