 "You go away from here or I'll call my husband."
 "Is that there stoop-shouldered man plowin' corn in the next field your husband?"
 "Yes, he is."
 "I take back what I said. I've got a heart in me, I have. If you've got a meal of victuals for a poor starving man, give it to your husband."
Office Chatter.
 "How do you like your job?" asked the inquirer.
 "It's dirty work," replied the new blotter. "Still it's rather absorbing."

CONVEY MUCH IN FEW WORDS

Japanese Proverbs Pungent, and Their Repartee Sharp, Keen and Stinging.
 It has been said that the Japanese are an apt and witty people in their proverb as they are in their works of art. What, for example, could be more appropriate to men in certain desperate circumstances than their "Man may erupt when he can no longer swim!" "While the tongue works the brain sleeps," is another saying of the Japanese, which expresses their contempt for loquacious persons. The Japanese are quick at repartee; their wit is keen and tempered, and they are clearly not the rightist owner, but a snip in brief, terse form. In illustration of this there may be cited the following instance:
 There was being tried in a court a case involving the possession and ownership of a piece of property. The litigants were brothers. The holder, who was clearly the rightful owner, had assaulted and ejected his brother and was protesting his right to defend his claim.
 The examining magistrate listened, very patiently to him until he closed with the words, "Even a cur may bark at his own gate." Then the judge qualified his verdict, as if he were stating an abstract point of law—"A dog that has no gate bites at his own risk."

 Upon the initiative attempt success of your efforts, repeat the operation ad infinitum.
 It is an exceedingly lengthy byway that falls to produce some tangible evidence to prove that its natural tendencies point to an apparent longing to execute a right angle.
 When the household feline has tentatively raised its paws, the small rodents will undoubtedly take advantage of her absence to participate in unseemly gambol commencing with the impudent detour to a trunk containing a pair of mittens. The operation of conveying a load of burden in the general direction of the trough containing aqua destillata may prove to be one of comparative ease, but the process of inducing the quadruped to partake of its contents thereof is often a matter of conjecture, to be determined only by the volitional inclination of the animal in question.—Judge.

From "Michigan," The "Land of Plenty," in a comparative study of the agricultural conditions as well as the educational conditions at such as to be worthy of considerable pride to the citizens. There is no other public institution in the state to be compared with that of the public schools. President Emeritus Angell of the University of Michigan declares that the people of Michigan have a "veritable passion for education."

From the very beginning of our state the public education has been recognized as a state function. The ordinance of 1837 set forth the principle that of the public schools. "Religion, morality and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged." From this principle there has never been any deviation, and the successive constitution has confirmed the provision which worked out by educational laws of Michigan.

So state has better provided for her children in the matter of public education than any other state in the Union. The primary school fund, provided for by the constitution, has been kept intact for educational purposes. This fund yields an income annually of over five million dollars, which is distributed to the several counties in the state. The average cost of the one-room rural school is $4,000; that of two years ago was $4,000. There are 1,500 more school libraries than there were in 1910. The value of school property in the state is $100,000,000.
