Dr. J. D. KELLOGG'S REMEDY

The Better Way.

Charles M. Schwab, congratulated before turning cattle into such cornfields. As the winter advances open the bars to shelters, feed racks and grain troughs.

Corn silage will be invaluable at this time, especially for cattle and sheep. Keep the feed racks filled with corn stover, hay and straw, but do not be wasteful in the feeding.

The amount of grain to put in the trough cannot definitely be given. It should vary well in accordance with severeness of winter and condition of stock. This is a point that can only be decided in the feed lot. To permit the stock to go perfectly without concentrates at this time would be a grave mistake, and in all probability make impossible the task of bringing it to spring feed in a healthy and vigorous condition. Such a condition is imperative in the case of breeding animals and essential for feeders if best results are to be obtained.

The matter of feeding hogs, included in Class I, presents an entirely different problem from that of the other stock. It is true that they may profitably be run on grain fields, meadows and pastures before snow arrives, but concentrates must constitute much of their ration after outside fields are closed for winter. Roots, chopped alfalfa hay, apples and waste products of the dairy and household will do much toward keeping down the cost of their winter feed. In fact, any products that will substitute for the forages and grasses in the field, which feeds are no essential to the conditioning of brood sows, can well be used.

Concerning the feed for stock included in Class II, little need be said. It is a fact well known that horses at work require both care and feed. This they must receive if their work is done. To furnish the dairy cow with rations not intended to meet the demands made upon her system by the milk she gives would defeat the purpose for which she is kept. As the food requirement for these different classes of live stock is a matter of common knowledge to stockmen it remains only to see that it is provided in abundance.

With Class III, the young and growing stock, most costly mistakes in feeding occur. A full realization of the fact that cheapest and most rapid

CROP BOUND CAUSES TROUBLE

Ailment Is Due to Bird Swallowing Something That Cannot Pass Into the Esophagus.

Crop bound goes under two or more names. Crop bound proper is due to the bird swallowing something that cannot pass into the esophagus, or, if it gets in the first part, cannot pass on. A surgical operation is the only help here.

Gaseous crop is a crop full of gas, caused by gas-forming bacteria. These finally produced inflammation. Any disinfectant that will kill germs in water will kill those in the crop.

Put Up Extra Feed.

A rule for putting up feed for winter use which will always hold good is to put up all you think you can use and then add 25 per cent more. In an occasional year the surplus will not be fed, but in four years out of five the feeder is always glad to have the extra feed.

PROFITABLE WINTERING OF FARM ANIMALS

Hogs Following Steers in Feeding Lots.

The bulk of the feed used for wintering stock should be made up of roughages from the farm. Small amounts of concentrates fed daily with these feeds, make comparatively cheap rations entirely suitable to certain classes of live stock.

For convenience in planning winter feeding farm animals may be divided into three classes:

I. Mature animals not producing an income during winter months.

II. Animals producing an income during the winter.

III. Young and growing stock to be retained on the farm the following summer.

In Class I may be included all mature live stock held on the farm, either for breeding purposes, future work or finishing for market the following summer.

In Class II may be included work horses, cows producing milk and stock being fattened for market or conditioned for sale during the winter months.

In Class III may be included all young and growing stock on the farm.

The big saving in the winter feed bill can be made with Class I. This does not mean that animals of this class should be permitted to come through the winter in a run-down and weakened condition. Rather than consider such a practice it would be far better to sell the stock in the fall. It is meant, however, that they can and should be maintained on the cheaper feeds. Roughages, supplemented by a small amount of concentrates (oil meal or grain) are in favor for them. Give the horses, cattle and sheep access to cut-over grain fields and straw stacks, meadows, wooded lots and pastures. Horses and sheep may have access to husked-out cornfields. In certain sections where losses of cattle have been experienced in the past from the so-called cornstalk disease farmers should consider this fact be-

Simple but Satisfactory Feed Trough.

TAKE CARE OF EWES DURING THE WINTER

Important Duty to Perform to Insure Lamb Crop to Be Harvested in Spring.

The winter care of the flock is important to insure a lamb crop to be harvested in the spring. Ewes in good condition need not be fed grain until about a month before lambing, when they should gradually be accustomed to it. Ewes in thin or poor condition should receive from one-fourth to one-half pound of grain daily. Corn alone is not the best grain ration. A ration of six parts corn, three parts wheat bran, one part linseed oil cake, by weight, has proved very satisfactory. A ration of corn, oats and bran, equal parts by weight, can also be recommended.

The sheep should receive as much clover or alfalfa hay as they will eat. The amount of hay eaten can be cut down by use of corn silage or corn stover. Two pounds of clean, sweet corn silage can be used to replace about one pound of hay.

Well cured corn stover is also relished by the ewes. Ordinarily, there is little danger of the sheep eating too much of it, if hay is fed once a day. The greatest danger of corn stover comes from making it the exclusive feed. Clean salt and water should be kept before the flock. Sheep should always have a dry, well-bedded floor to lie on.

EXCELLENT AS FEED FOR GROWING PIGS

Experiments Show Skim Milk to Be Valuable Hog Feed—Builds Bone and Muscle.

Skim milk is a most valuable hog feed. Experiment shows that it compares with grain for a feed at the rate of six pounds of skim milk equal to one pound of grain. Its chief use should be as a supplemental feed for the growing pigs. It is a wonderful muscle and bone builder. To be sure, it can be fed to fattening hogs successfully. Whether it be fed or not should be governed by the price of grain and the price and availability of skim milk.

When it may be fed economically can be determined from the comparative value: one of grain equals six of skim milk. When skim milk is fed to fattening hogs, it should be fed only as a part of the ration. Three pounds of skim milk to one of grain is the proportion usually recommended. In other words, balance up the ration. When the amount of skim milk to be had is limited, best results will follow giving it to the growing pigs, and supplement the fattening hogs' ration with tankage in limited amounts.—Orange Judd Farmer.

Good Grooming.

When a horse comes in after work sponge off the harness marks and sweat, his eyes, his nose and mouth, and the dock. Wash his feet, but not his legs.

Potato Spraying.

Don't use lime sulphur for spraying on potatoes. It reduces the yield and is not at all satisfactory. Use Bordeaux mixture.

Harder Still.

"Well, have you reached the point where you can assemble a motor car?" asked Mr. Chubson.

"No, indeed," answered Mr. Jobson. "In fact, I haven't yet reached that point where I can assemble the price."

A Fool There Was

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright, 1915, by W. G. Chapman.)

Mortimer Strange sat on the veranda of the Gloss Country club and sipped his whisky and soda. He was thinking hard—so hard that pretty Mrs. Lydia Emmons, at his side, tapped him playfully upon the arm.

"What is the matter that you are so silent, Morty?" she asked.

"I was thinking," returned Mortimer Strange, sipping down his drink.

"So I had seen thinking extremely hard. He had been thinking over his past. At the age of thirty-five, four years ago, he had suddenly found himself transformed, through a mixture of luck and ability, from a hard-working clerk in the war office to manager of the Ginever powder factory at a salary of fifteen thousand. The powder factory was in intimate touch with the government at Washington and was the only maker of the famous new thermolite powder.

As a clerk, Mortimer Strange had lived contentedly with his wife, who was a couple of years older than himself, in their pretty cottage outside Washington. Doris had worked hard for him; at thirty-seven her beauty was a little faded. But they had cared sincerely for each other.

Then had come the removal to Gloss, and Strange found himself in an entirely new atmosphere. For the first time in his life he realized that evening clothes were an indispensable item in a man's wardrobe. Then there was the social life, and the country club—and, in short, he had come into the world of which he had often speculated but which he had never thought to enter.

Doris had tried to keep up with the new life. But the motherly little woman had hated the glare and glitter; she pined secretly for the kitchen and the fireside. At last she had given up the attempt to live Mortimer's life. Gradually they had drifted apart. The wistful look on his wife's face was the hardest thing that Mortimer had to bear.

And the friends that had grown up around him as if by magic were of the fast set. There was Mrs. Lydia Emmons, for instance. Nobody knew where Mr. Emmons was, but she had money and spent it royally. Nobody thought it strange that she and Mortimer were always together.

"That Was Why I Came to You."

The man had lost his head in his surroundings; they were too big for him. He was a little statue on a mighty pedestal, the important manager of the powder factory. None of his business acquaintances entered into the social whirl. A staid lot, he left them at the factory door at four o'clock. His life thereafter was his own.

"What's the use of thinking?" inquired Lydia, pouting.

"No use!" cried Mortimer hilariously, starting up. "Come in! They're going to dance."

In the dance his enigma seemed to resolved itself. He knew that he had outgrown the old life. It had become impossible. She had won a high post, but he had given hostages to fortune in the shape of his little, neglected wife. The dance with Lydia Emmons seemed to cap his decision. He drew her outside.

"I've been thinking things over, Liddy," he began.

"So have I, Morty," answered Lydia Emmons, looking curiously into his flushed face.

"This can't go on. I want you to come to Europe with me and let us start in new. With my knowledge of the manufacture of thermolite I can command any price. The Reich company, who are the agents for the German government, would pay me a million dollars for the process. They have been trying to work me for a long time. And it isn't a government secret altogether, remember. It is the factory's property, and I improved it. Why should we slave here when we can have a palace abroad?"

"Morty, you've been drinking," answered Lydia lightly, trying not to let him see how his words agitated her.

"I love you, Lydia. Why don't you believe me?"

"Because you haven't proved it."

"How can I prove it?"

"Give me the formula."

* * * * * * *

In her apartment in the town Lydia was enjoying her afternoon cigarette the next day when she heard maid Mrs. Strange in. Lydia, who of course could not refuse to see her, prepared uncomfortably for the interview. While she was dressing she pictured in her mind some awkward country woman, some "gawk" of a creature, as she phrased it to herself. She was surprised at the refined, delicate little woman who stood before her.

She bowed. "Mrs. Strange?" she inquired.

Doris stood looking at her steadily, her hands clasped in front of her. "Do you love my husband?" she asked.

Lydia Emmons, entirely at a loss how to answer, remained silent.

"I have not come to you to make trouble," Doris went on. "But, you see, I love Mortimer, and we have no children. So that will make it easier."

"Easier for what?"

"To let him divorce me."

"I will answer you truthfully," said Lydia. "I do not love your husband at all."

"Then why is your name coupled with his constantly? Why does he spend all his time with you? Oh, won't you either take him, if you want each other, or give him back to me?" wept Doris.

Lydia looked at her, and an intense curiosity stirred in her. She put her hands upon the other woman's shoulders.

"Why does he mean so much to you?" she asked. "He is not worthy of you."

"He is! He is!" cried Doris indignantly. "It is I who am not worthy of him. I have not been able to live as he wished me to live. He is my husband, and it is my duty to make him happy. I want a chance to try."

Lydia Emmons was still more astounded. "But—but I don't want to rob you of him," she stammered. "Tell me, Mrs. Strange, what sort of woman do people say that I am?"

"Bad!" sobbed Doris, like a resentful child.

"Very bad? Thoroughly vicious and depraved?"

"I don't pay heed to gossip unless I have to. But people in our circles are talking. That was why I came to you."

What would she think if she knew what Mortimer had asked her? Lydia was suddenly appalled.

"Mrs. Strange," she said quietly, "I am not what the world would call a good woman, I suppose. Maybe I am naturally bad, or maybe I never had a doubt chance when I was a girl. But I am not as bad as some think. Do you know, I have often wanted an opportunity to make some sacrifice, to show that there is some good in me. It isn't much of a sacrifice so far as your husband is concerned, Mrs. Strange—but I'm going to make it. I am sorry for what I said. You are a good woman, and I shall tell every body so."

Lydia smiled and kissed her.

* * * * * * *

On the veranda of the club Mortimer Strange was waiting for Lydia Emmons. He had been waiting most of his spare time during the past three days, and he was uneasy and perplexed at not having seen her. It was growing dark, and a sort of jaded romance was growing in the man's soul.

And when at last she came the spurious passion that leaped up in his heart threatened to sweep him from his bearings. She was dressed all in white, and there was a look on her face that trembled him, though he did not know why, of Doris in the days of their courtship.

She sat down at his side and they two were together at last, as Mortimer had hoped. He took her hand.

"I've done it," he cried exultantly. "I have brought the proof with me—the proof for which you asked."

He drew the paper from his pocket and gave it to her.

"Here is the value of a million dollars," he said. "What the bribes of the Reich company could not effect is yours. You shall keep it, and the proceeds, as the proof of my love."

"Morty," said Lydia quietly, "did you ever tell any other woman that you loved her?"

"Not as I tell you." he answered.

"Your wife then. You didn't care for her when you asked her to share your life in the long ago?"

Mortimer wriggled in his chair. "Why do you mention my wife?" he asked.

"Because you have the best wife in the world, and are the least deserving of her," she answered. "You are a fool, Morty, just a common little fool. You are going to get the worst turning down that you have ever had. You are going to be made to see yourself as you are—a little man in a big part, who has lost his bearings and taken the spurious for the real. Go home to your wife, Morty, and ask her forgiveness upon your bended knees, because you need it badly."

The man rose, furious, trembling. "You led me on, even if I am a fool," he shouted. "What was your game, then? You have thrown away a fortune. Where do you come in?"

Lydia laughed softly. "I was promised ten thousand to get this for the Reich company, that's all," she answered, handing him the paper.

Napoleon's Brother.

An interview with Napoleon's brother Joseph, from a hitherto unpublished manuscript, appeared in Harper's Magazine. It throws an interesting sidelight on Napoleon's directness of speech. Joseph was sent for by the emperor. "On my arrival," says the narrative, "being a man of few words and little ceremony, he abruptly said: 'I have sent for you, Joseph, to make you king of Spain!'"

HADN'T THE HEART TO STOP

Woman's Naive Explanation as to the Reason for the Very Much One-Sided Gabfest.

A woman from the hinterland belt, who had seen a railroad only once and who had ridden into Atlanta on a Decatur street on her husband's wagon, was arrested for talking back to an officer of the law.

"She jabbered steadily for a half hour when I told her she must not stand so long squarely in the middle of the street," explained the officer who made the arrest. "I couldn't even get a word in edgewise. It was the most awful gab I ever heard."

Turning to the prisoner, the judge said:

"What have you to say for yourself, madam?"

"Couldn't help it, Judge," responded the offender, "tried to ter shet up, but th' officer looked so much like my husban' I jes' couldn't find th' heart t' stop!"—Case and Comment.

He started to reach a legal tome from a high shelf, in fact, had his hand upon a book—when the drift of the question flashed upon him, and the book of law quickly flew from the attorney's hand at the head of the perplexed and irate man, who disappeared through the office doorway.

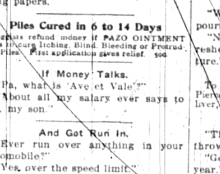
Three Hundred Million Bushel Crop in 1915

Farmers pay for their land with one year's crop and prosperity was never so great.



Regarding Western Canada as a grain producer, a prominent business man says: "Canada's position today is sounder than ever. There is more wheat, more oats, more grain for feed, 20% more cattle than last year and more hogs. The war market in Europe needs our surplus. As for the wheat crop, it is marvelous and a monument of strength for business confidence to build upon, exceeding the most optimistic predictions."

Wheat averaged in 1915 over 25 bushels per acre
Oats averaged in 1915 over 45 bushels per acre
Barley averaged in 1915 over 40 bushels per acre

Prices are high, markets convenient, excellent land, low in price either improved or otherwise, ranging from $12 to $30 per acre. Free homestead lands are plentiful and not far from railway lines and convenient to good schools and churches. The climate is healthful.

There is no war tax on land, nor is there any conscription. For complete information as to best locations for settlement, reduced railroad rates and descriptive illustrated pamphlet, address Superintendent Immigration, Ottawa, or
