Garrick Theatre.

Robert B. Mantell, the only actor now on the American stage, considered worthy of regard to rank as the successor of a long line of tragedians which included Forrest, McCullough and the Booths, and his only one now attempting the greatest heavy roles of Shakespeare and the classic dramatists will be seen at the Garrick theatre, Detroit, during the coming week in eight representative plays from his permanent repertory of twelve. He will open his engagement in his Shakespearian masterpiece, "Hamlet," and close it with his interpretation of Shylock in "The Merchant of Venice." Tuesday will be offered "Romeo and Juliet"; Wednesday matinee, "The Merchant of Venice"; Wednesday evening, "Richard III"; Thursday, "King Lear"; Friday, "King John"; and Saturday matinee, "Hamlet."

It was during a performance of "King Lear" in Philadelphia, the night of September 30, 1912, that Mr. Mantell was presented with a laurel wreath by a number of literary men of that city in recognition of his standing as the foremost actor on the American stage. This was only one of numerous honors that have been conferred on Mr. Mantell because of his performance of "King Lear." At his first presentation of the part in New York, 1907, William Winter, the most authoritative of Gotham critics, assigned to him the position as leader of the American stage, which he has held in the estimation of the critics ever since.
