Submarine Position-Finder.

A new device, which will enable a submarine to find her own position under duress, and will do away with the dangerous necessity of coming to the surface for that purpose, is announced by Mr. Hudson Maxim, the inventor. Mr. Maxim says that the implement permits the commander of a submarine to find his position on a map at any time, within a hundred feet of sea level.

He Was Pretty Hungry.

Little Willie's mother sent him to bed without any supper.

At eight o'clock, little Willie lay drowsily in his little bed in the dark, his father appeared at the door and whispered:

"Son, could you eat some honey in the comb?"

"Jiminy, dad?" Willie answered, "I could eat it in the brush!"

Sports Clothes in Bright Hues

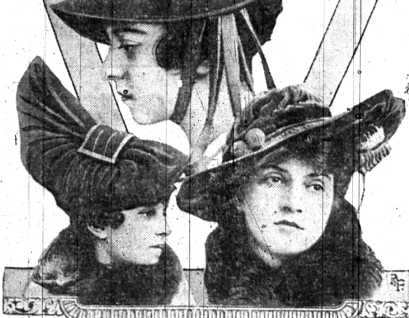

Everybody is pleased with the light, gay colors of the coats and sweaters, going outfits, and all sorts of sports clothes in which the feminine half of the world has gone about this summer. And now that heavier things are needed for the crisp autumn days, the gay colors are to continue, and the dashing broad stripes, too. And with them, white and cream color in heavy knitted caps, sweaters and scarfs are not by any means an infrequent sight.

The gulling sweater and cap shown in the picture is a very good type of the most practical of all these very practical things. Just now there is a fad for long woolsen scarfs. They are knitted or woven in all the accepted gay colors for sports clothes, in white and in the quieter colors as well. For every woman, young or old, appears to have waked up to find herself wanting a woolen scarf and the dark, quiet colors are made for the few who like grave things. One sees these scarfs everywhere—with breast suits on the shopping rounds, in the autos along the drives, at the outdoor concerts, and on the business girl going to and from her work. In gold and light yellow, in rose and primrose pink, in vivid green and brilliant cerise they greet the coming autumn with hues as bright as those of the turning leaves.

New Millinery Rich and Chic

The sweater shown here has a collar and belt in line with the new styles, wherein a belt across the back or extending part way round the figure is much featured. The cap to match is made with haremness as well as comfort in mind. A scarf, added to these two pieces, leaves nothing to be needed for the outdoors. Yet the shame and humiliation rankled. However much a man may think he can go back on his own people, he is one of them for the remainder of his life, and so it came to pass that the glances scornful and high, of the white girl burned in his soul.

The fellow ought to be kicked out of Grey, one man had said of him, and the other answered:

"They wouldn't have him anywhere in the score of our people."

Dawson knew that this was the current opinion of him. Often he planned to escape, to go somewhere where he could start anew. But he knew that his memories would be with him forever. Nowhere in the world was there a place for him.

The rumors of active unrest accentuated that winter. Dawson, seated round the table, had dismissed the matter with a dozen of the chiefs. All agreed that the projected uprising was madness. They knew the terrible power of the white man's guns.

"But what can we do?" they asked. "Our young men want to teach their spears, then."

Dawson knew that the "then" had come when he found that the anti-freedomers of the natives were at a conference. Dawson knew that his memories would be with him forever.

In the new settlement of Grey, which is the first town of the white race, built north of the Zambesi, men passed Dawson and felt ashamed of their color.

"What is that man?" inquired Lady Sibyl Forrest, who had newly arrived at Grey, where her father was administrator, from London.

"That? Oh, that? Dawson?" answered her escort, a young officer in the mounted police. "Not a very respectable subject, Lady Sibyl. He—"

"That's the worst of it, the rotter used to be a gentleman," said Dennett, the young officer, to a friend that evening at the club.
