Character of Warfare That Has Engaged Armies in Alsace for Seven Months - Capture of Cemetery Costs Men Dead Than Were Ever Buried in It.

London. - The following is published in the London Daily Express from its correspondent in Paris.

When the snow-bomb wind comes roaring over the Alsatian hills its icy blast chilling the body to the bone...

"This hole of cheerfulness greivally disturbs the enemy," says the French where more than in this sector of the front.

"Here we are in German territory; there is no gleaning that all is cheerfulness. How far we have progressed is an forbidden to state, but it seems that no fewer than a dozen Alsatian towns are now within the penny postal zone of France.

"The capture of Metzeral cemetery was a great portion of the plains of Alsace, but ever since the French first reached the foot of the hill the whole of Hartmannsweiler-Kopf has been wholly in the possession of either French or German.

Warfare in Black and White. "Here is warfare in black and white. The black uniforms of the German Alpines are silhouetted against a background of snow.
