

THE HOLLOW TREE

Allen Bigelow Tells Grandchildren Another Story of His Boyhood Days, in Franklin.

In 1850, we lived in the village of Franklin, Oakland County, Michigan. Boys, ranging in age from 10 to 15 were quite numerous, especially for so small a village.

Of course, in winter, no more little to keep us busy except school, but our mothers kept us quite busy hoeing garden, getting wood, and a score of chores around the home.

The following winter, there was very much snow, and in places, it was drifted several feet deep.

Old Uncle Hamlin, as the father of the Hamlin boys was called, had long wanted a smoke house.

The next summer, we boys had become fairly good swimmers, and made a dandy smoke house.

One day the pond was very low, as the miller was repairing the mill.

The morning sermon-subject next Sunday will be: "What the Bible Teaches about the Holy Spirit."

The Men's Bible Class is an open forum on practical religious questions.

Bible School every Sunday at noon. The young people of the Eworth League will conduct "Win My Church" Meetings.

Garrick Theatre.

"His Majesty Bunker Bean."

Taylor Holmes, the brilliant young farceur, who has visited this city on two different occasions last season in "His Majesty Bunker Bean," taken from Harry Leon Wilson's story of the same name.

Here is a laughter-provoking stage contribution that is entirely devoid of horse play, has a delightful love triangle, and is a charming combination of a truly comic situation, lasting humor, dashes of widow, a big underlying, and good, old-fashioned love romance.
