DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER.

BRINGO'S MATE.

"Bringo," said Daddy, "was a big lion who lived in the forests. There were other lions around—lions with different length manes and of slightly different color."

"Bringo was very bright in color—a handsome shade of yellow and his mane was very beautiful and long."

"Far away in the field he saw that there was game for him. But he did not want to get into the open. There he knew he should find not only game, but traps—traps and possibly a gun would sound and he would stay in the field until picked up—a lifeless lion—with no game."

"So Bringo learned to be wise and not to take foolish chances. Of all the lions he was the greatest, and his fame was known far miles and miles around."

"The only thing that Bringo minded was a storm and then he would roar, while all the other lions would roar too."

"Of course all lions hate a storm and they are strangely frightened by it. They roar to each other and beg each other to rush to safety."

"Now Bringo was feeling very happy one day later. He had had a great and glorious victory. He had strayed a little further than usual and he had almost been captured."

"I Was Detained on Business."

"Yes, the great Bringo had almost been captured by clever men—but not quite. He was home again after the victory."

"The game was wonderful, he had had a splendid hunt and though he had been hunted, he had not been captured."

"Such a meal as Bringo had that night and he shared it with Miss Lioness whom he admired greatly."

"He had invited Miss Lioness for supper that evening and she had accepted. He had told her the time to be on hand, and there she was, right on time, ahead of Bringo."

"But when Miss Lioness reached Bringo's lair, no big lion was to be seen. Miss Lioness felt her heart beating quickly. For even a lioness can be filled with fear. And she thought the great lion might have been killed by one small shot."

"She thought and thought of it, but at last Bringo arrived and they had the game for their supper."

"After they had eaten for quite awhile," Bringo said:

"I was sorry to be late this evening. I could not help it. I was detained on business."

"Now all of that sounded very fine to Miss Lioness. She didn't quite know why Bringo should have been late, but she didn't want to say a word for her to say even to herself—and she did not know quite what the business might be. To be sure, Miss Lioness had brought a fine supper, and maybe it took him some time to get it."

"Why were you late?" she asked after a moment.

"Oh, there were the men with traps. I spied them. But they didn't see me. If they had seen me they might have shot. So I crouched and waited until they had gone. I fooled them. They did not know I was around."

"At first they thought that I was somewhere nearby, but as I so seldom go into the open fields they decided they could not have seen me after all."

"I stayed near the forest line, of course, and when I saw them I waited for them to go. It seemed a long time, and I knew I couldn't move without being seen. I did not want to lose the game I had captured for my supper."

"And I did not want to take any foolish chances with my life," Bringo shook his great mane and roared.

"And why not?" asked Miss Lioness, roaring in her throat she considered her sweetest, most lovely voice.

"Because I think you are the nicest lioness in the whole forest," said Bringo, "and I would like to have you choose me for my companion in life."

"Miss Lioness was expecting this but it made her very happy to have Bringo say it. To be the mate of the greatest lion of the forest! Oh, such a magnificent honor!"

Miss Lioness roared that she would be honored to be Bringo's mate, and both roaring sweet speeches to each other, they walked off, side by side, into the deep forest."

The Sunny Side.

There is a sunny side to every question. Even when a big trouble confronts us, there is some phase of it more hopeful than the others. Whatever you have to bear, look for the sunny side of it, and keep that before you—Girl's Companion.

Charming Character.

No matter what work you have to do, do your best. If it does not show. Sometimes young people tell themselves that it makes no difference whether they put their best endeavor into their daily tasks, or only their second or third best. It may not make any particular difference in the appearance of the work itself, but it makes all the difference in the world to you. Work half-done or done half-heartily, cheapens character—Girl's Companion.
