ments of the engineers in this warwhen we drove into Ostend.

The chief of the American mission at Belgain headquarters had warned as dramatically against an attempt to make the trip. At least three days would be required, he said. The roads were torn up by shells and mines and congested with troops. Yesterday a light ear had taken twelve hours to make twenty miles. But we started out and had as smooth a road as any booklevard in the middle West for the entire distance. There were several places where we had to make detours through villages, and as the dozens of bridges across the canal near Ostend Were all blown up we had to drive on that will stand almost everlasting ago. The scores of drainage slutices across the roads had all been covered with temporary bridges by the Belgian engineers following up the German destroyers. These bridges and culverts are not as neat and workmanilke as the ones the British and Americans build, but they hold the traffic, and that is the important thing just now. Through the suburbs of Ostend we passed cheering Belgians dressed for church. The people were so prayer-

Through the suburbs of Ostend we passed cheering Belgians dressed for church. The people were so prayerfully grateful to the British that they did not seem to mind the mud we spattered all over them. Many of them ran off the road behind trees, and ings to the English. As the extraordinary Flanders und would even squirt up to first floors of houses many of, the people, learning from experience, had taken to second stories, from which they clapped (their hadds and waved flags. The only damage we saw in Ostend was the wreckage of the marine and railway stations and the shittered glass in buildings on the sea front, due to the air concussions from British monitors pounding the retreating enemy.

Hat Check Pirate Is Put in "Please" Class

New York.—The hat-check pirate in Gotham has been relegiated to the "picase" class rather than that of "pay me. The first ping hat-check boys or girls is not compulsory—In fact, should be classed as "nonessential."

The opinion, followed, the compaint of a cabaret customer "whose $3 hat has already cost him over $44" and who was called a "piker" by a check boy when he refused to check his hat and coat.

the end of the pier was the gallant old the dead of the pier was the gallant old Yindictive, after its magnificent part in the Zeebrugge bottling-up exploit, where she served as a boarding ship and carried the great superstructure to permit British marines to climb on the Zeebrugge mole, had been filled with concrete and sent in to block Ostend as U-boat and destroyer base. The Vindictive made it impossible for six-able ships to get into Cstend, and/the Germans, just before the retreat. Irded to complete the work by sinking a inmil ship alongside the Vindictive.

brought particular distinction on him-self or his armies. The first battle of the Marne was the reason why General Joffre became a "marcelal de France." Today there are only three "marcelals" in all France-Joffre, Foch and Petain. The marvelous syrategy of Foch stands out more clearly every day. Napoleon had many "narcelals," all of them prodifies of vilor and verne of genius.— Massena, Lances, Soult, Murat, Ney and others. The emperor made them either dukes or princes or both, and sometimes kings. But with all their glory I doubt if any one of them has rendered such signal services to their Gailleni's Great Feat.

General Gailleni, the former governor of Paris, would have been made a "marchail" had he only lived long cnough to receive the honor due bim. It would be a beautiful idea if the government of the French republic created him a marchal even now, and inscribed on his tomb: "Gailleni died in the service of his country. General de Division—Marchal de France." It might not do the general any good, but it would please the army and, the eattre country, while it would render justice to an immortal name and would be a fitting tribute to a great and good soldier, though whether they call him general or marshal or drum, major makes little difference.

Gailleni's name rests securie in his "abward proclamation and in safekeeping of 40000000 free Frenchum for whom proclamation and in safekeeping of 40,00000 free Frenchmen, for whom he did more than any other one man to cream their liberty at a critical time.
