"Well, what do you think We looked up and there stood William H. Hunt right straight up from Florida, with an orange in his hand for the editor, one he picked right off the tree. It was fine. Only a day or two at home and back he went to the Sunny south. He made this a hurry-up business trip. William is delighted with the South and sees a brilliant and profit making business down there. All the Birmingham tourists are well, happy, fat and lazy.

With the opening up of an early spring, business men of the community have again became cheerful and have very optimistically summarized the present situation. Every thing seems to indicate a prosperous year despite the war for most business. A general building plan will probably be carried out in the village and surrounding it with its many attendant businesses revitalized and stimulated. The farmers are planning a never to be forgotten year of intensive agriculture activity and farm implements of every kind and variety will be in demand. Between Uncle Sam, and the Kaiser's hatred, the farmers are putting their best into this years work. The automobile industry with their local agents will probably specialize more in trucks and tractors, but a general campaign to use pleasure cars instead of the railroads is being started. Birmingham at least is not going to be but will keep things going in the business world which in itself is an aid to the government as well as local business.

"UNDER AN UMBRELLA."

"From under the roof of my umbrella I saw the wash d pavement lapsing beneath my feet, the news posters lying smeared with dirt at the crossings, the tracks of the buses in the liquid mud. On I went through this dreary world of wetness. And through how many rains and years shall I still hurry down wet streets middle aged, and then, perhaps very old? And on what errands? Asking myself these cheerless questions I fade from your vision, Reader, into the distance, sloping my umbrella against the wind."

L. PEARSALL SMITH.

"From under the roof of my umbrella I saw the washed pavements, lapsing beneath my feet and found joy in their cleanliness and sheen. The news posters, though smeared with dirt, were eloquent of service rendered without thought of reward. The tracks of the busses in the liquid mud reminded me of the part the highway had played in the progress of man, and that if the trackless sea and air now carry his burdens and his thoughts, I was thankful for the mud which seemed the type of that material universe through conflict with which the facu ties of many have been sharpened and purified as by fire.

On I went through this world of wetness, a song in my heart, for well I knew it was bringing coolness to the fevered, refreshment to the thirsty and life to the plant. And if, through many years I shall hurry down streets now sunny, now overcast, middle aged and then perhaps, very old, I hope the same cheer may be mine, the inner meanings ever plainer, though pain and suffering be the price I pay.

Voicing this hope, I fade from your vision' Reader, into the distance, feeling that to hold my umbrella bravely is everlastingly worth while.

BOLTON SMITH.

An Extravagant Woman.

"My Auntie Frettle was in certain ways the most extravagant woman I ever knew," stated the old codger. "For example, she got the measles at sixty-seven, when by taking time by the forelock she could just as well have had them at nine."—Judge.

See Only Good in People.

It is a mistake to grow tired of people or their efforts to please. The vast majority of us are trying to do our best. True, some of our number make a brilliant showing, while others do not cause a ripple of comment. But if we are going to get any real satisfaction out of life we cannot stop to weigh people's capabilities or attainments, but should, on the other hand, be grateful for whatever consideration they show us, and only see in them all that is splendid and good.—Exchange.

Pundora was an extraordinary creature. Every young woman is. She will still, however, a young woman—that is to say, a mixture of timidity and boldness, of prudery and shamelessness, of divine kindness and cold cruelty of youthfulness, and especially of profound knowledge and abysmal ignorance.—Exchange.

Auction Sale of New Furniture!

Our inventory shows a $40,000.00 Surplus Stock of Furniture on hand. WE ALSO NEED CASH.

Thurs., Mar. 21, 1& 7p.m. D.K. Smith's Royal Oak Store

Beds, Dining Tables, Rockers, Wood, Coal and Gas Ranges Dressers, Rugs, etc.—all at your own price.

When a dealer wants to make a quick disposal of goods it is better to sell quickly at auction five pieces on which he may make only $1 each, than to wait to sell in the ordinary way one piece, though he make $5 on it. Is this not reasonable? We want to get rid of the goods. If we cannot get any profit, they will go below cost.

Terms—1 cash. Time can be given, if desired, on balance up to 90 days.

Remember, the auction is for next week Thursday at 1 and 7 p. m. Make a note of it—all who are wanting one or more pieces of Furniture, etc., this spring.

W. B. FLORADAY, Auctioneer.

Time Is Valuable.

Habit accustoms us to doing most of the everyday things in particular ways, and we think of them only when they chance to be done differently. We sometimes get the habit of being late in keeping engagements, and feel that the loss, if any, is our own affair. It is also the affair of the one we keep waiting, as he may consider his time of much value. Only the late and careless, whose time is of the least value can afford to waste it by carelessness in keeping engagements.—Exchange.
