Offending Soldier Proved He Knew the Value of a Little Soft Soap, Judiciously Applied.

It was the general's inspection day, and his remark was heard all over the square. "Splendid!" he exclaimed, as F company passed the flagstaff.

"Did you hear that, Bill?" said a ranker, just after passing the saluting base.

"You stand fast in the ranks after parade," snapped a sergeant, "for talking during inspection."

Next day he was brought before the adjutant.

"Private So-and-so, you are charged with talking in the ranks during an inspection parade. What excuse have you to offer?"

"Well," replied the ranker, "as we were passing the saluting pole I heard the general remark, 'Well done, lads! Splendid!' and, of course, me being elevated over hearing such praise, remarked, 'Yes, and you, too.'"

"Er—I say, sergeant, dismiss such frivolous complaints before we again!"

NEWS REVIEW OF THE GREAT WAR

Germany's Tricky Peace Move Is Bailed by President Wilson's Diplomacy.

ARMIES OPPOSE ARMISTICE

Cambrai Captured, 2nd Hun Offensive Line Smashed, Compelling General Retreat—Yanks Successful in Champagne—Beirut Occupied by the French.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD.

Prince Max of Baden, the new imperial chancellor of Germany, requesting President Wilson to arrange for an armistice and a subsequent discussion of peace terms, and stating that Germany accepted the president's 14 points as a basis for the negotiations, evoked three separate and distinct replies. President Wilson answered that he could not suggest an armistice while the boundaries of Germany, and then asked whether the German government accepted the terms laid down by him and whether its object in entering discussions was one to avenge upon the practical details of their application; furthermore, he wanted to know whether the chancellor was speaking merely for the constituted authorities of the empire who have so far conducted the war.

The people of all the allied nations, soldiers and civilians alike, answered Prince Max with a tremendous shout of "Unconditional surrender."

Nearly all authorities agree that the chancellor's proposal was insincere; that the request for an armistice was made merely to give the military command a chance to reorganize the shattered armies, and that Prince Max knew the suggestion for a peace conference, as he made it, could be rejected, giving him the opportunity to say to the people of Germany: "I have offered to end the war on the enemy's own terms and he refuses. The German nation now must unconditionally fight on."

At first there was some disappointment because President Wilson did not reject the German proposal swiftly and bluntly, but a little consideration has convinced almost everyone that he evaded a trap and by his direct questions put the German diplomats in a position of the utmost difficulty. At the same time he left the door open for ultimate negotiations after Germany has accepted his 14 points and given full guarantees. As for the armistice, he did not agree to that even were the German armies to be withdrawn from all occupied territories, recognizing the fact that the declaring of an armistice is up to the military commander. The president's note was fully approved, probably in advance, by the allied governments, and was given the highest praise by the press in England and France as well as America.

Any agreed cessation of fighting at this time, short of the abject surrender of the central powers, would utterly disappoint the soldiers of the allied armies and the people who are backing them on. Foch's forces have been permitted to follow up the Huns on their retreat to the Meuse they will destroy a large part of their effectiveness and capture probably half of their material. On the other hand an armistice would permit the Huns to retire within their borders with their armies intact and prepared to maneuver effectively behind their abandoned and powerfully fortified lines. Animated by a spirit, not of misanthropy, but of retributive justice, the men of the allied armies feel that no peace should be granted Germany until her cities, her towns and her people have suffered some of the horrors of war that her brutal soldiers have inflicted on Belgium, northern France and Serbia. The absolute unrepentance of the Huns for the outrages shown by their action in looting and wantonly destroying the towns in France from which they are being driven and in their practice of carrying away with them thousands of the helpless inhabitants who are forced to work for them like slaves. The formal war of France that there would be retribution for these shameful deeds has been disregarded, and if adequate punishment is not inflicted there will be a general feeling that justice has miscarried.

President Wilson and his confidential advisers, it is said, still believe the German people will rise in revolution and oust the Hohenzollern crew, and his inquiry as to whom Prince Max represents is significant in that connection. The chancellor, in his speech to the Reichstag, undertook rather feebly to demonstrate that recent political changes actually had put the people in power and that he was their representative. But all that was looked on as bunk.

The diplomatic situation resolved itself down to this: The German government must either admit defeat and surrender on allied terms, or it must confess that the Huns are not ready to give up the fight. That is the hole in which President Wilson has placed Prince Max and his associates.

The greatest blow delivered by the allied armies last week was between Cambrai and St. Quentin. There Field Marshal Haig's tireless forces, reinforced by American divisions, tore a 20-mile gap through the strongest of Hindenburg's boasted defenses, capturing dozens of villages and many thousands of prisoners and on Wednesday occupied the long and desperately defended city of Cambrai. The Huns, in full flight, blew up most of Cambrai and burned Bouchain, Marcy and many another beautiful town, but the allies did not even stop to extinguish the flames. The enemy apparently was attempting to recover his line back of the Selle river from Le Cateau to Solesmes, so Haig's troops, led by the cavalry, pushed rapidly forward and the big guns, always under fire, only the German machine-guns put up a creditable defense, the riflemen who could be overtaken generally surrendering willingly.

While their comrades were helping the British in the great drive in the Cambrai region, the American First army was exceedingly busy west of the Meuse. For many days the doughboys battled their way through the Argonne forests, at the northern end of it they went up against a concentration of Huns gathered for the defense of the Kriemhilde line. Pausing to permit their artillery to pour a rain of shells on the German positions for 19 hours, the Yanks advanced to the attack Wednesday, and by a brilliant and swift advance broke through the enemy line. To the right of them other troops forced their way through the Canal valley, and this made possible the storming of the Mamet trench of the Kriemhilde position. The engineers were advancing right along with the infantry, clearing the way through the entanglements. Important heights south of the Marcy were captured, and the Yankees joined hands with the French at Laon. East of the Meuse also the Americans were going forward, and, at the time of writing, these movements, as well as those all along the line, were still progressing.

These operations in France were steadily crushing the great German salient whose apex was near Laon, and the French were maintaining a continuous pressure on both sides of that city. They also were compelling the further retirement of the Huns who still remained south of the Aisne between Neufchatel and Vouziers.

The American air service on the front of the First army clearly demonstrated its superiority during the week. Huge aggregations of bombing planes continually flew over the enemy front lines, communications, back roads and troop concentrations, doing incalculable damage, while the pursuit planes kept the air clear of Hun machines.

The Serbian army kept up the unrelenting pursuit of the Austrians in Serbia as the Bulgarians withdrew from that country, or surrendered, according to their agreement. Before the end of the week the Serbs were outside close to Nish and Sofya were steadily driving their west. In Albania, the allied troops made considerable progress. The Italians took Elbasan after crushing determined resistance by the Austrians, and then continued their advance northward.

The occupation of Beirut by French marines only accentuated the troubles of Turkey. The cabinet resigned, after a peace note was said to have been sent to President Wilson, and Tawfik Pasha, it was reported, would be the new grand vizier. His sympathies are rather with the allies, and there is little doubt the sultan himself would be mighty glad to get out of the war on the best terms obtainable. London was convinced Turkey had notified Germany it intended to make peace and that the Kaiser tried to end the war by the proposal of the chancellor.

Austria-Hungary was in a condition almost of panic and was nervously awaiting the outcome of Prince Max's effort. Reports from Vienna said the ministerial council had decided to produce national autonomy "in order to make President Wilson's stipulations more conformable." Among the people of the empire the movement to proclaim the separation of Hungary from Austria was making great headway. Meanwhile the Germans were conferring and preparing to declare the independence of their country and its separation from Austria-Hungary, and, knowing the dangers of such action, made their wills and settled their personal affairs.

Berlin, who has succeeded to the throne of Bulgaria in the abdication of his father, Ferdinand, adhered to the policy of neutrality, and, according to his allies, has ordered Germany and Austria to quit their country within a month. Already the rail connection between Vienna and Constantinople seems to be effectively broken.

Three more "victories" by the murderous German U-boats are to be recorded. The Irish mail boat Leinster, the Japanese liner Hirano and the British liner Teledonia were torpedoed. The total loss of life was estimated at more than 900. In the case of the Teledonia about 230 were killed, most of them by shrapnel fire after the boat had ceased to resist.
