NO SWIVEL CHAIR FOR FORD'S SON

FATHER WAS RESPONSIBLE

Declares He Told Edsel That War Work in Factory Needed Him— Would Not Accept Safety First Commission.

Mr. Clements, Mich. Henry Ford during the last hour of his second day on the witness stand, took occasion to claim full responsibility for his son, Edsel Ford's, refusal to accept the selective draft. He wanted to exhibit, said Mr. Ford, but he told him that he could do more good where he was. He was offered several commissions which would have permitted him to wear a uniform and stay right in the factory but he wouldn't accept them.

Having made his decision, it was shown, both Mr. Ford and his son were favored to camouflage it behind a swivel chair commission carrying boys and spurs. This subject, the introduction of which has been awaited ever since the trial opened, did not develop along the lines which had been generally expected. Mr. Ford's inclination to shoulder full responsibility, his statement that his son was absolutely essential to the war work being done in the factory and his revelation of several offers of a commission, admitted that the charges, spread during a political campaign, and recently reported on the floor of the United States senate, to the effect that the young president of the Ford Motor company had shirked his duty, were fully refuted. That Tribune omitted to do pursue the point.

It was the first time that a full explanation of the facts in connection with Edsel Ford's war work had been made public and it was easily the feature of the seventh week of the trial.

Henry Ford spent seven days on the witness stand and at this time he gave less than two hours to his own lawyers. As long as counsel for the Tribune was hammering Mr. Ford's name quietly in the witness chair, answering the constant fire of questions with great patience. But the instant his own lawyers took him in hand a attitude changed. He became self-conscious and diffident. He would not accept the efforts of his counsel to provide him with an opportunity to reveal the full extent of his patriotic work during the war, his intimate views on his advanced ideas of the relations which should exist between a capital and labor.

It is all in the records, said Mr. Ford. I have told it all here once. He avoided, with care, anything that verged on boasting. He would not even describe the work he did in the war which his factories did and whose record-breaking performance in the production of munitions was mentioned by the declared. We did all we could get of that, said Mr. Ford. I know all about it. I feel just as the soldiers feel. I don't want to talk about my war work.

The news did, however, after being pressed, explain that his son had bought out the minority stockholders of the Ford Motor company because these interests had had of an Mr. Ford supporting the war effort and he thought the government, the war effort and the product. He wanted to cut into them for his own sake, he said, so that he could carry out his views of the distribution of profits to employees through increased wages and to the public through lower prices. It was either buy or sell, Mr. Ford said. Always correct selling and buying a new company. His son, however, took up the task of buying out the minority stockholders and succeeded, despite the general belief. In the final deal would that this stock could not be purchased.

One of the most interesting developments of Mr. Ford's testimony came out when it was testified that his son's legislation has ever sought to aid in the production of birds, out of a million. It was shown, however, that the national and state courts were largely unimpressed with the privileges, but the one favor that Mr. Ford has ever asked from the law makers had nothing to do with birds. It was to have a law passed that would give him the right to sell his own stock and to have it sold to the public.

The subject was a result of questions concerning Mr. Ford's bill of title. The matter was taken up by Mr. and John Burroughs, the naturalist's bill his friends outside of his immediate associates.

Litigation in which Mr. Ford has been interested was another subject of interest. It was shown that when the automobile business was in its infancy its growth all manufactures of motor cars were compelled to pay tribute to what was known as the Selden patent on internal combustion engines. Mr. Ford bought this patent for seven years and was enabled by his victory, freed the entire industry from its shackles and made possible the wonderful growth which has marked the last few years.

Digging. It is well known that the discoverer of gold, without exception, will not only dig for gold but also for diamonds and jewels. A rock, ground, if it is better by nature and the same, he digs for diamonds and jewels. It is the same with Mr. Ford. He has dug for diamonds and jewels. He has dug for diamonds and jewels. He has dug for diamonds and jewels. He has dug for diamonds and jewels.

WELCOME DEATH'S COLD HAND

Little Wonder That Men Who Realize Their Appalling Loneliness Should End It All.

Alone. Not a living soul near to whom to speak. For a man it seems almost by God, whose presence we can penetrate the confused, tangled, the city streets. Alone and penniless with none to know or care. It is a harsher lot by far than death. What wonder that men who are alone and penniless with none to know or care. It is a harsher lot by far than death. What wonder that men who are alone and penniless with none to know or care.

LAUBER'S MAXIMS ON THRIFT.

Off the stage Sir Harry Lauder, the Scotch comedian, who was knighted for his great war work, is a great champion of thrift's virtues. He was drawn to him in the war through patriotism, but he advocates them now because of the opportunity they offer for thrifty persons to get ahead.

1. Believe toward your purse as you would toward your best friend.

2. View the reckless money spender as a criminal and shun his company.

3. Dress neatly, but lavishly in a bank pays a higher rate of interest than your bank.

4. Take your amusements judiciously. You will enjoy them better.

5. Do not throw away your energy; use them, they are as strong as being as good.

No Romance.

After Cinderella left the court messenger reported the finding of a slipper.

The prince yawned.

"This is a very lovely slipper," said he, "but it is not my slipper. It is my slipper."

Miss Thompson was called before the court. She was called before the court. She was called before the court. She was called before the court.
