Salisbury Cathedral

Salisbury Cathedral, From the Neary Lake.

APHILIP, 12th Earl of Salisbury, Bishop of Old Sarum, was the first to build the cathedral, and his tomb is still in the center of the nave.

The tower and spire. Without its spire the cathedral is a mere pile of masonry, with a few architectural details, with the exception of the tower and spire, which are the crowning triumph of English architecture throughout the ages. For over a century the building stood with a low, stunted central tower. Then, in 1220, came the daring conception of raising a tower and spire soaring to a height of more than 400 feet. The boldness of the plan and the danger of its execution have made it a story of the building's history.

Why the Spire Was Changed. The founders of the new cathedral gave several reasons for abandoning the structure on the hill of old Sarum. One reason mentioned in the bull obtained for the purpose from Pope Honorius, dated March 29, 1227, was that the hill's situation of old Sarum placed the cathedral at the mercy of winds so stormy that not only was it often blown down but the tower and spire were in constant need of repair. Another trouble was the insufficiency of the water supply, and a third was the fact that the hill was the site of the old Roman camp, and the structure became in constant need of repair. Reliable Information

All American women know of the great success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in restoring to health women who suffered from ailments peculiar to their sex, yet the cure is so simple and so effective, and do not realize that it is absolutely true—if they did, their laboratory would not be half large enough to supply the demand, though today it is the largest in the country used for the manufacture of one particular medicine.
