

The Man Nobody Knows

By HOLWORTHY HALL.

"LET 'EM MAKE ME LOOK LIKE THAT!"

Everyone knows about the Legion Etrangere, the famous Foreign Legion of the French army. Well, Richard Morgan of Syracuse, N. Y., enlisted in the Foreign Legion in the great war under the name of Henry Hilliard. So you can guess that the hero was not in love with himself or with life. The Hun sent him to the hospital with a wound in knee and arm and a face pretty much shot away with shrapnel. The surgeons fixed up his knee and his arm. When they prepared to restore his features, he lied and said he had no photograph of himself. And in his rage against life he caught up a picture postcard bearing the radiant face of Christ and cried:

"Let 'em make me look like that! Or anything else, either. I don't give a d—!"

The French surgeons were interested and did a good job. And presently "The Man Nobody Knows" is back in Syracuse, telling of the death of Dick Morgan and selling mining stock and falling deeper in love with Carol Durant, the "only girl" of his old life who had refused to marry Dick Morgan, the failure.

Complications! Well, rather especially when the mining stock apparently turns out to be worthless and the only man in the world who knows Hilliard's secret dies of apoplexy and the hero finds out that the man he did love Dick Morgan. And Holworthy Hall handles these complications and these real, human characters, and the American community in the masterly way that makes him read from one end of the country to the other these days. Good reading!

CHAPTER I

In the city of Syracuse, New York, a young man named Richard Morgan was sitting at a table in a cafe, looking out over the city. He was a man of about thirty, with a face that had been through a great deal of trouble. He was looking at a picture postcard of a man's face, which he had just received from a friend. The man's face was a radiant, youthful face, and Richard Morgan had never seen it before. He had been told that it was the face of a man who had been killed in the war, and that it was the face of a man who had been killed in the war.

There was a knock at the door, and a man came in. The man was a young man, with a face that was as radiant as the man in the picture postcard. He was looking at Richard Morgan, and he was looking at the picture postcard. He was looking at the picture postcard with a look of surprise, and he was looking at Richard Morgan with a look of surprise. He was looking at the picture postcard with a look of surprise, and he was looking at Richard Morgan with a look of surprise.

Richard Morgan looked up at the man, and he was looking at the man with a look of surprise. He was looking at the man with a look of surprise, and he was looking at the man with a look of surprise.
