THIS A HARD LIFE.

"We heard a story the other day," says an up-state paper in an item quoted, "about an editor having to be carried home on a stretcher as a result of having received a kind word over something he had printed. The story amused him. But just as he reached home someone gave him a card causing another article he had published, and he got up and returned to work."

Yes, "It's True!"

"Let's try it!" exclaims the Magazine Recorder. "Read these words of wisdom on the country page." A child is born in the neighborhood; the editor gives the hoodlanged youngster and the happy parents a send-off and gets him. It's christened and the minister gets $5 and the editor gets $20. The editor publishes and tells him about the "beautiful and accomplished brat." The minister gets $10 and a piece of cake and the editor gets $20. In the course of time, the day the doctor gets from $15 to $100, the minister perhaps gets another $5, the undertaker gets from $75 to $150, the editor publishes a notice of the death and obtains a two column long and a card of thanks and gets $2000. In the end, every country editor gets rich. Have you paid your subscription?"

"Look Who's Here" at Shubert-Detroit Theatre.

It does not happen twice in a generation that an actor succeeds in identifying himself in the mind of the public so thoroughly with a character as Barney Bernard has identified himself with Abe Potash. When ever in the past the perfect union of actor with the part has occurred, it has almost invariably been in the creation of the role of the hunchback and most appealingly sympathetic character. The audience that has seen Mr. Bernard in the new play "Look Who's Here" and Jules Robert's "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" at the Garrick Theatre, did not expect to discover new phases of the Potash nature. They would have expected the slightest intimation by the playwright upon their being introduced to Abe Potash. It is a surprise to find that the actor is so fully identified with the character that he is able to support the character which requires Mr. Bernard to be a truly fine artist.

There was no Mr. Bernard in the past. The story concerns an author of "Look Who's Here" with much practical what he writes with the result that his charming young wife lacks the tender sympathy of which were carefully chosen for their beauty and youthfulness. In continuing and scenery of the play, the author is promoted.
