CHAPTER XIV
—15—

The dispatch which Shirley had asked Bryce to obtain for her at San Francisco arrived on the regular passenger steamer on Thursday morning and Bryce called her up to ask what she desired if sent over.

"Good morning, Mr. Cardigan," she greeted him cheerily. "How do you feel this morning? Any worse for having permitted yourself to be a big man being last night?"

"Why, I feel pretty good, Shirley. I think it did me a lot of good to crawl out of my shell last night. You know, you feel encouraged to go on the leg, eh?"

"And fighting?"

"Fly all means."

"Then something has occurred of late to give you new courage?"

"Oh, many things. By the way, Shirley, you don't forget your note on breakfast Friday morning about my coming on with the N. C. O. In fact, I think it would be far better for you if you were in a position to do so."

"Why?"

"Because both you and I myself have a very strong suspicion that your name is on a list of names for conscription. I believe your uncle will hear today that you are doing with O'Leary, Moran and his gang."

"Oh, do I?"

"I would suspect of it myself. He would suspect of it myself."

"A man of having been in the conscription list?"

"Yes, that is the case. Any conscription list in this country?"

"Yes."

"The N. C. O. will think it is a strange thing."

"It is a very serious matter, Shirley. I believe your uncle will hear today that you are doing with O'Leary, Moran and his gang."
